"Yes," said the telegraphic operaway from being an unmitigated boon and blessing. Many of the symbols are so perilously alike that errors are sure to occur from time to time. "For instance, 'bad' and 'dead' are composed of dots and dashes, the so! difference being that in 'dead' there is a very slight space or pause that does not occur in 'bad.' The difference is' so slight, however, that one has to be listening very attentively to hear it Now, it is a most unfortunate fact that many people are very fond of using the phrase 'he is bad' for 'he is ill,' so there are quite a number telegrams which should read, say 'Father is bad,' that get altered in transmission to 'Father is dead.' "Then, again, many people curtail their messages to such an extent as to invite errors. For instance, a certain lady telegraphed to a registry office for servants, Send them both thanks,' by which she meant 'Thank' you, send both of them' (the both' referring to two servants). The telegram reached its destination as Send them both back.' This error was due to the fact that 'th' and 'b' are not unlike in the Morse alphabet, which, together with the fact that telegraph-
