a form apparently cultivated in public school circles. In connection with all this it is in teresting to read an entrance examina tion paper on grammar. The grammatical professors should get down on their knees and confess: "We have done those fhings which we ought not to have done, and we have left undone! those things which we ought to have done, and there is no health in us." A study of over 12,000 assault cases at the police courts shows that there is a steady rise in number from January to August. Temperature and fighting go together. But on the very hottest days assault cases are few. People are too limp. Suicides increase in number from January to August, too. But for suicides the very hottest days are the worst. The number that take place in April, however, is curiously high each year-almost as high as the August figures, a fact for which all sorts of fanciful explanations have been given. One is that when no practical results come from the new hope that comes to even the most hopeless with the bright days of early spring, despair sets in again more bitterly Statistics compiled from schools show that it is or. hot, muggy days that boys do the most inaccurate work, and are most restless. Calm, cold days are the best, from the teacher's point of view. Wind brings an amount of physical energy that makes discipline harder to keep. On dull, cloudy days behavior is good but less work is done than usual Girls, however, though afterwards they change decidedly in this respect do not seem to be affected by the weather at all.
