Old Fairs and Tawdry Lace. Stourbridge fair is one of the oldest institutions of its kind in England. Stourbridge is near the famous University town of Cambridge and the charter for its fair was formerly granted in perpetuity by Henry VIII., and reckoned, in Shakespeare's day, to be the largest fair in Europe. It was followed by another famous autumn fair at Ely, which is of interest as having enriched our language by an epithet. At this Fair of St. Audry (as St. Etheldreda was afnecklace was sold bearing her name, in time becoming known as "Tawdry laces," such as were alluded to by

Thus, in a work called "My Lady's Looking-Glass," 1616, the author laments the passing of a happy age when a man could woo his wench at no more expense than a pair of gloves, a thimble, or a tawdry lace. time, the epithet, "tawdry," came mean any such piece of glittering tinsel as the fairs provide to this day.

Surplus women.

"Surplus women," so much discussed of late, will be rare in 1971. In England three years ago women between 15 and 65 were twelve per cent. more numerous than men of the same age; in about half a century. this excess is expected to drop to 1 1/4

An Open Letter to the Buying Public of Milton and Surrounding Country.

Saturday last, May 16th, Mr. A. E. Moss, of Grimsby, concluded the most successful sale in our history, not from a standpoint of profits, but from the big turnover. It has come to our notice several times during the last few days that a rumor has been circulated around to the effect that we had purchased a bankrupt stock, or that we had made special purchases for the sale. WE WISH TO EMPHATICALLY DENY THIS RUMOR, and furthermore we wish to state that not one dollar's worth of extra stock has been purchased for the sale. Our sole reason for conducting this sale was to reduce our stock, which stood over $10,000.00, down to $6,000.00, and we are well on

BY REQUEST many of our customers, especially those from the surrounding district, have expressed their regret at not being able to come to Milton to visit this big sale on account of the rush of work on the farms, we have, therefore, decided to continue our sale for a few days longer. Broken lines and sizes will be still further reduced and the men and women of our district should not miss this opportunity to save real money in footwear for the entire family.

BUT TAKE NOTICE it will be only a few days longer and then back to the boxes go these shoes and back to former selling prices, so don't delay.
