For More Than Ten Years This Modern Don Juan Broke the Hearts and Purses of Unsuspecting Females In England.

Every matrimonial agent throughout England, at some time or other, has been duped by a plausible scoundrel known as the "King of Marriage

For more than-ten years this modern Don Juan has made a profession of marrying women and immediately disappearing with their money and jewellery.

This individual is a native of Prague. Even in his early youth women found him a delightful companion, and few complained even after he had robbed them of all their worldly possessions. After being compelled to flee from his native country, where he was detected in a barefaced attempt at blackmail, he went to London and started in business as a

As soon as he had acquired a mas-Lery over the language difficulty he changed his name to G____, and opened an office as a matrimonial

Most of his victims were foreign women whom he lured to England by promises of marriage to wealthy clients. The number of his victims during this period of his career must have reached an appalling total, for complaints of his activities were legion. He then turned his attention to the wide field offered by legitimate matrimonial agents, and selected his victims with a degree of cunning. His cleverness in covering his tracks was extraordinary, but one particular facial characteristic eventually led to his becoming a marked man in the offices of marriage promoters. This was a cleft chin, which even the growing of a beard failed to hide. When the war came G- took Mr. J. G.
