Automatic Railway Relieves Congestion-6,000 Million Packages Handled In London-Talking From Scotland to Switzerland.

twenty feet high, is a tiny cabin from which one man, with the aid of a few levers, will direct each train to the next halt. Although the vehicles will travel at a speed of thirty-five miles an hour, there is little fear of accident, for a dead section behind each train makes collisions almost impossible. The Post Office deals with about 6,000 million packages a year, and this automatic railway will relieve the congestion, especially at Christmas time. Near Wood Street, a tunnel is being bored that is to run along London Wall to Moorgate. This tube will contain nearly sixty highly-colored telephone and telegraph cables, leaving a small passage to enable repairs to be done. In Great Britain there are 4,720,657 miles of telephone and teelgraph wires, and more than three-quarters of this wire has now been placed underground. Storms are responsible for most of many a message from London to Swindon was diverted and sent via ity sharing ledgings with Kean at Birmingham. The wealth that passes through the post is incalculable. Nearly fifteen million money orders are purchased every year, and 115 million, postal orders are sold. Romance lurks in many of the Post Office departments. If you ven-(ture up a dark staircase in an ugly, black building close to Blackfriars Bridge, you will come abruptly to a spot where the word "distance" is not understood, and the laws of

I sound are defied. On the walls of a long room, small green and red lights flicker in and out like winking eyes; while around and above, but within easy reach, are thousands of tiny holes into which young women are continually thrust-Ing little plugs.

This is the great trunk line exchange, which disposes of thousands of calls daily. At a centre table sit, merly had clamored for him, now From a tube close at hand quear compressed air. Each slip is marked that is being put through. These girls decide how the connection shall be made. When they have finished with a slip, it is put in one of many tubes, each with its distinctive label. The slip then disappears, for it is blown to its destination. The preservation of the loudness and quality of a voice between such distant places as John o' Groat's and Geneva is another marvel of the Post Office. It is accomplished by ampli flers situated at the principal stations on the route. They receive the weak voices, but send them forth at full strength. The amplifiers work by valves similar to those used for operating a wireless loud speaker.

In another part of the trunk exchange is the inquiry department. The operators here are armed with directories which give the name and number of every subscriber in the kingdom. If you have a friend in Scotland, but do not know his number, they will tell you quickly. And
