THE REPUBLIC OF FINLAND.
A Northern Country With Long
Severe Winters.

County Judge's Criminal Court.

A VENUE in a remote corner of the world has just witnessed the trial of a man charged with murder. The man, a Finn, was accused of killing his wife, a woman of 50, in a fit of rage. He was found guilty and sentenced to death. The trial took place in a small town in the north of Finland, a country which has been described as "the Republic of Finland." It is a country of forests, mountains, and lakes, with a population of about 5,000,000 people. The capital city is Helsinki, which is situated on the southern coast of the country. The language spoken in Finland is Finnish, which is a language of the Finno-Ugric group. The people of Finland are known for their love of freedom and independence, and they have a strong sense of national identity. They are also known for their hard work and their ability to survive in difficult conditions. The country is rich in natural resources, particularly timber and minerals, and it has a well-developed industrial sector. The economy is based on agriculture, forestry, and mining, with a significant contribution from tourism. The country is also known for its high standard of living and its commitment to social welfare.

Old maps show Finland as a part of northwestern Russia, separated from Sweden by the Gulf of Bothnia and the Gulf of Finland at the south; these seas gulping up the arms of the Baltic Sea. Within the last 50 years Finland has increased to two-thirds the area of Manitoba. The lakes of Lapland now cover ten per cent of the total area. The census of 1923 gave a population of 4,000,000, which is almost half a million greater than that of the province of Ontario. Fully ninety per cent of the people speak the Finnish language, the language of the remainder being Swedish. In religion the people are Lutherans, except for two or three members of the Greek Orthodox church of Russia. Among persons between fifteen years of age only one
