B. C. NATIONAL PARKS. Two Are In the Rocky Mountains and Two In the Selkirks.

Among the many attractions in . British Columbia to tourists are the national parks in that province, of which there are four - two in the Rocky Mountains and two in the Selkirk Mountains. The Yoho Park and the Kootenay Park are just west of the great divide and adjoin the Banff National Park in Alberta. The Glacler Park and the Revelstoke Park are farthest west. These regions of scenic beauty, parcountries so far apart as China ticularly in the mountain ranges of the Central Rockies and Seikirk, were set aside by the Department of the Interior, and with the exception of such modern conveniences of travel and accommodation as were necessary to make them accessible and to afford comfort to the traveler, they are still in their pristine state. Comfortable hotels and chalets, motor camps and tea rooms, are scattered along good motor roads and drives; · Scotland, and would not change | while trails radiate from the princlpal centres to great wilderness regions, only partly explored, of forest, mountain, lake and stream, and the uplands with their alpine gardens, which is the oldest royal burgh in nesting just below towering peaks,
