The Romans varied the monotonous spectacle of gladiatorial fights and hand-to-hand struggles between wild beasts and men, with mimic sea fights and baiting of crocodiles, in at least two of their circuses, which could be flooded with water. And in milder moods they had chariot races and performing horses, voice from the cloistered patio bewrestling matches, rope dances and yond

But the more than 351,399,800 Indians crowded into the triangular peninsula that juts out from the bottom of Asia are far from unified, culturally, religiously, or politically. India is a crazy-quilt of presi-

Drop for drop, the Black Widow's venom is more deadly than that of the rattlesnake. Owing to its larger size, the rattlesnake injects much more poison than the Black Widow when it strikes, and, therefore, its death rate is higher-it kills about one in three. The Black Widow kills about one in twenty, but she is more common, and bites more people, so that, in the course of a year, the Black Widow causes more human deaths than does the rattlesnake.

Also "Apple of Morocco"

The earliest colonists to reach this continent brought seeds with them, among them those, of love apples, which in these days were cherished more for the beauty of their fruit than their service as a food. Not until the beginning of the Nineteenth century did the tomato descend from its ornamental position among the posies to its lowly place in the vegetable garden. The real history of the temato as an economic factor starts around 1847, states a writer in the New York World-Telegram. It was then that the pioneer tomato grower of this country, A. W. Livingston, of Ohio, started to take the tomato seriously. What he found was a pin cushion shaped fruit, more or less hollow, tough and full of acid juice. The evolution of the tomato forms a fascinating chapter in the history of American vegetables.

built them for conquest. And when their empire fell, so did the science War revived that science on a grand scale, too, says a writer in the Washington Post. Napoleon may command respect or condemnation as a military glory-seeker, but he needed bridges in his business. So bridges were built. Yet, some spans came between the Romans and Napoleon. For instance, there was the old stone London bridge. Its distinguishing feature was the houses and shops bordering its roadway. These were of wood, regularly burned down with terrible loss of life, and were just as regularly re-erected. Railroads, coming along in the 1830's, took up where Napoleon left off. Then came the first all-iron bridge. Scottish engineers developed this type with a span in Glasgow in 1841, and a mistake of Scottish engineers signaled the passing of large iron bridges. The mistake was in not allowing observes a writer in London Tit-Bits Tibet is a strange place inhabited by strange people, with strange customs and habits. It is a province in Central Asia, west and southwest of China, and north of India. The population is largely a mixture of Chinese and East Indians. The highly rarefied atmosphere causes all kinds of trouble. In winter the air is so cold and so deficient in oxygen that explorers have found it almost unendurable, and many travelers have lost all their pack animals during this season. In summer the clear sky and thin air permit the sun's rays their full power and the hottest days are often followed at night by temperatures

The country is rich in minerals, but robber bands are numerous and bold, so travelers find it safer to move in large companies. Yaks, mules, ponies, and even sheep are used as pack animals.
