One of her most treasured possessions is a gold brooch, given her by her husband on their wedding day. She smiles quietly to herself as she exhibits the jewelery, and admits that they were as up to date as any of the young folks of today, with the "gift of the groom to the bride." Her wedding dress, she remembers, was of worsted and silk, a very fancy gown for the time, but she cannot remember how it was made. Mrs. Young went to Ballinafad on her marriage, attended Burns' Presvears, and made herself a host of friends who help to pass the time for her now that she has passed the century mark, and is no longer as active as she would like to be.-Toronto Evening Telegram.
