U.S. Divorces on Increase As World War Aftermath
Divorces in the United States showed a heavy increase as an aftermath of the World war, maintained a high level during the prosperous years following 1922 and, for some unexplained reason, took a sharp turn upward to unprecedented heights beginning with 1934, statisticians of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company have discovered.

They base their conclusions on a study of the divorce trend in New England, the only section of the country for which data covering a long period are available. In these states, the ratio of divorces to the annual average of marriages for the preceding decade was 16 per cent greater than the corresponding ratio for 1890.

Many of the post-war divorces probably resulted from disillusionment after hasty marriages with soldiers bound for the front, the statisticians point out, while others were the result of opportunity presented by prevailing high wages and war profits, which furnished the necessary funds that would otherwise have been lacking.

The increase in divorces occurring in the prosperous period after 1922 ran true to form, it is explained, because it is well known that the incidence of divorces usually follows the business cycle closely. The record rise that started in 1934, however, is not so easily explained, as "no data are at present available which offer an authoritative interpretation of this remarkable development."

The statisticians suggest, however, that many of these recent divorces may have been "poor men's divorces," instituted on the grounds of nonsupport and abandonment, in this connection it is significant that the chief statutory cause of the recent rise was "cruelty," a convenient designation for concealing a variety of actual causes.

Survey Reveals Opinions On Criminal Punishment

Pardon and parole should be abolished and persons convicted of crimes should serve their full sentences except where injustice is revealed by new evidence, in the opinion of 33 per cent of the men and 88 per cent of the women covered in a survey of 25,000 Northwestern National life insurance policyholders.

Death penalty for murder was approved by 86 per cent of the men and 75 per cent of the women; 88 per cent of the men and 83 per cent of the women favored sterilization of habitual criminals. Many expressed alarm over current conditions and favored "cracking down" on tends treatment of criminals. The first aim of penal and legal forces should be to protect the law-abiding by making crime dangerous and its rewards unpleasant, though 81 per cent of the women and 78 per cent of the men, with rehabilitation of the criminal important, but secondary.

The public would be kind, and generous to write more often to Carola, to say things that they had been, and perhaps were now, close friends of the great and famous Mariel Hardwick. They would be shocked to hear that Mariel had gone and Mariel had stuck to her earliest ambitions. She had continued to draw cartoons and submit them to editors. And at last had come first success.

A newspaper syndicate bought a drawing. Later they bought more, and still later she signed a contract with the same syndicate to do a scheduled series.

Now she had an office of her own, and was relishing her reward.

She was famous among her friends; sometimes she would be famous to the world. And poor Carola, who had quit in favor of a $30 a week office job was "somehow in Washington."
