He's Now in Hollywood Remember Murderers' Row? The old original Murderers' Row? Babe Ruth batted No. 3, Ping Bodie No. Bob Meusel No. 5, Wally Pipp No. 6, and the ball game was over. Well, on either an R-K-O or a Paramount stage, depending on just how the work falls, you will see an electrician handling a sun arc or a baby spot or whatever the cameraman happens to be wanting. He is middle-aged, a little thick around the pants, more than slightly bald, and he has the sloping, gorillalike shoulders that all good hitters seem

He's the old No. 4 of Murderers' Row, Ping Bodie, the Yankee outfielder. Real first name Frank, but nobody uses it even now. He was named Ping on account of the sound his bat made when it hit a ball. "They weren't baseballs; they were rocks," says Ping, who turned up 30 or 31 home runs lots of seasons in many ball clubs.

Bodie is now an operator-meaning he can do anything an electrician is expected to do. Probably the best trained and ablest men are assigned to the sun arcs. With modern high-speed film cameramen get along in small scenes with 500-watt lamps, but big scenes still require the carbon burning arc lights, and there's an art to keep a pair of carbons burning without flicker and without noise. Ping has been married to the second Mrs. Bodie for 15 years and they're about to build their own house in North Hollywood, which is in the San Fernando valley. The valley is hot now, as real estate goes, with more and more movie folk moving across the mountains away from Hollywood.

Of Music: Accomplished | 8 Did you know that a king once made a special decree to fix the price on cats? He did. This was Howell the Good, king of Wales in the 900s. A kitten, he said, before it could see should cost a penny; before it had caught a mouse, two pence; and after that, four pence, a great sum in those days. But-the animal must be perfect in hearing cause this larger, improved fruit is and sight; a good mouser with whole claws; and, if female, a careful nurse. If he failed in any of these conditions, the seller must refund a third of the purchase

> But the cat is accomplished as well as good for catching mice. can sing. Perhaps you don't admire its song but, unlike the dog, the cat has an appreciation of music that can be trained to a high degree. Cats like to walk up and down the piano keys, listening to the notes. And don't you ever think that cats can't count! A mother cat, checking over her kittens, known instantly if one is missing. And cats can talk, in meows as eloquent as words. One very cold night, someone had left the window open in the kitchen where a cat and her small kittens were sleeping. The cat went to the mistress' bed and meowed so piteously that the woman went to the kitchen and closed the window.
