GRADUATION CEREMONIES

June is a grand month at countless schools and colleges, as young people stand up in their fascinating rows of happy faces to receive their diplomas. These young folks have successfully passed one of the most important tests life has to meet. They have run up against formid able difficulties of knowledge and and have gathered some share of the world's inherited wis dom and skill. If the old folks had to learn the lessons of a modern college or high school student, many of them would flunk. The graduates can feel that they have denied themselves many pleasures which less studious youths have enjoyed, so they could give their first energy to this preparation for life They are rewarded by the improve chance they stand in the world. They have formed friendships which will last all their lives, and they will not forget the inspiring counsel of teachers. On graduation day things are said to which the world should listen. If some distinguished speaker addresses the occasion, he leads his auditors to lofty regions of thought, and pleads for higher and more intelligent purposes.

If the graduating students have prominent place on the program, and present essays representing their own thought and study, it is fine ad vertising for education. It shows that the young people have acquired high degree of intelligence. People used to laugh at the old time gradu ating essay, on the theory that it told the world too confidently what to do. the advice given reflected high standards, and the world suffered if it rejected it. The warmest congratulations are offered by The Champion to all graduates who are receiving their diplomas this year, and we can feel confi dent that they will do fine work in the world.

FINAL EXAMINATIONS

Very many students in the various colleges and schools have been ramsacking their brains for the sometimes trying experience of final examinations. It is often claimed that a written examination is not a perfect test of the things a student has learned. Probably some students are so nervous that they cannot tell all they know.

Knowledge will not probably do a person any great amount of good unless he can put his finger on it. The student who can't pass an examination is often like the library which has never been catalogued. You can hardly tell where to find the books. Life is constantly asking all of us to p pass examinations. Our jobs ask us to remember things, and if we can't remember them we may have flunked the exam which life requires us to Marriage seems to call for great devotion than in former years, reason of the independent position of the modern girl. There were many women of former generations who were badly treated in their married life, yet who stuck by their husbands because they did not know how they could support themselves if they left their mates. That condition has been greatly changed, since the great majority of girls have learned to earn their own living if necessary. "All the world loves a lover," and it is fascinated by the feelings of affection which the marriage vows express. The joy which the new mar ried couple feel in this realization of the company assembled. With the utmost enthusiasm give their warmest wishes of friend ship and hope for the new couple setting sail on the sea of matrimony and experience. They say "Goodbye' to the fleeing pair with ardent hopes for a voyage that shall take them to havens of achievement and peace and rest and comfort.
