CLEAN HOUSES FOR POULTRY PAY

Sanitation is one of the most iniportant factors governing successful poultry production. It is a waste of time and money to grow good, healthy chicks out on clean land and later put them into winter quarters in a filthy pen, or even just a dirty pen. Well cleaned houses will pay good returns, says M. H. Jenkins, Dominion Experimental Farm, Nappan, N.

The usual time of cleaning the laying house at Nappan is in August or early September. After the older birds have been removed from the laying house, all feed and feeding equipment, roosts, nests and nest boards, dropping boards, as well as the litter are removed from the house. A thorough brushing of ceilings, walls and floors is made to remove all loose particles of dust and dirt. Then the walls and floors are thoroughly soaked and scrubbed with hot water in which creolin or lye solution has been used. This is done with a stiff broom so as to get into the cracks and crevices of the walls and floors. Following the scrubbing the whole building is given a thorough hosing to remove all particles of dirt and filth. All doors and windows are opened in order to permit the pen to dry out thoroughly.

While the pen is drying, the equipment which has been moved out into the open is bushed and then thoroughly scrubbed and hosed, using a disinfectant solution in the scrubbing. After the pen and equipment are dry the latter is put back in place and fresh litter is put in. This makes a nice, clean pen for winter quarters for the laying stock. Either creolin or lye may be used. Care should be taken not to get it on the body or the clothes. At Nappan one pound of lye to 3 gallons of hot water is used. When creolin is used the mixture is one-half a pint to 12 quarts of water. Both solutions have given excellent results. If this practice is followed yearly there will be fewer colds and diseases among the poultry flock.
