Production for Use and Not For Profit

J. B. Priestly champion of a different age, or is it a new age, said a few days ago: "We should have production for use instead of for profit."

Nobody has yet described this peculiar animal. We read about the humming birds of Brazil, the kangaroos of Australia, the many varieties of fish beneath the tropic seas, but there must be an enormous number of people who haven't the slightest idea of production for use and not for profit, and strange to say the least informed, are those who talk the most about it.

Things are produced because they have a use. If they have no use what would be the object of producing them? What is meant by these makers of phrases?

Ah, I know, some people want fancy "hair-do's", costume jewelry and ornamentation of dress. What do people seek in this world—pleasure and enjoyment, and if people do not get it out of these things, why do they pay for them? They are therefore, so far as the wearers are concerned, purchased for use, Mr. Priestly to the contrary notwithstanding.

When people are well dressed they are more efficient. If you want to hire a good stenographer, pick one who wears her clothes as if she were proud of them. "Careless of dress—careless of words" is a general rule. Where now, in this age, would we find a woman who wears clothes merely for use, solely as a cover for nakedness, merely to shut out both cold and heat?

What is generally considered as profit, constitutes payment for the use of buildings, machines and equipment employed in the production of goods. Here is a vacant lot, a building is erected, machinery is installed, production begins. A part of the selling price represents payment for the use of machines. Under socialism the same thing will happen—the consumer will pay, in the price of the things he buys, for the use of the machines which produced them. The socialist does not want to do this but he will have to do it nevertheless.

You may be a very efficient employer. There may be no bottle-necks in your business, employer-employee relations harmonious, health conditions satisfactory. You pay your workers more, they earn more. Profit, in this case, may come as payment for exceptional ability, capacity to direct the work of others, so that they produce more with less effort. What guarantee has Mr. Priestly that this quality will be enhanced when incentive ceases?

What reason is there to believe that we would, in that way, get greater value for our dollar? It not, then production for use may mean that the consumers of the nation will give more, get less. Profit is a measuring stick, an incident of good service. Profit provides evidence that the man who runs the business knows what he is doing. Will those who speak so frequently of production for use, and not for profit, tell us just how much extra they expect to get for their dollars under the new system? Are they sure that under these conditions they will have more dollars? There's the problem in a nutshell. — R. J. Deachman.
