Using DDT Sprays In Dairy Barns

A number of statements have appeared recently in United States newspapers which are critical about the use of DDT sprays in dairy barns. Some of the statements have even gone so far as to suggest that DDT is responsible for "virus X" disease of man and "X disease" of cattle.

An official statement has been made by the United States Department of Agriculture, after a meeting of the principal government agencies concerned with the utilization of insecticides. "There is no evidence" the statements says, "that the use of DDT in accordance with the recommendations of the various federal agencies has ever caused human sickness due to the DDT itself. However, minor toxic symptoms may be produced by kerosene and various solvents used in DDT and in practically all other insecticide mixtures." The statement denounces as "totally without foundation" published reports that DDT is responsible for the so-called "virus X" disease of man and cattle. Both these diseases, the Department says, were reported and recognized before DDT was ever used.

All pesticides sold in Canada come under the provisions of the Pest Control Products Act, administered by the Dominion Department of Agriculture. This is done to protect the farmer from buying worthless or highly dangerous preparations. No preparation is allowed on the market until it has been analysed and approved by technical officials of the Department. If such preparations are used in accordance with the instructions on the label, they will be effective for the purpose for which they are recommended, and will have no detrimental effects.

Spraying dairy barns with DDT, particularly with oil solutions, say officials of the Department, should be done when the cattle are not in their stalls. Special care should be taken to see that milk and cream cans and milking machines are not touched by the spray. DDT in oil solutions may be absorbed through the skin of the animals, and will be found in the milk and in the animal fat. There has been little or no difficulty in spraying cattle themselves with DDT, when wettable powders are used in the water since the water spray does not penetrate the skin and the residue is not absorbed by the tissues. Even with water spray, care should be taken to see that milking utensils do not come in contact with the spray.

"Peanut" Has Second Spring Derailment

For a second time this spring, the C.N.R. passenger train, commonly known as "The Peanut" was derailed in Halton County. Last Thursday night only the engine remained on the rails, while the balance of the train tore up yards of track and road bed.

The derailment occurred about 2 miles south of Milton as the passenger train was making the return trip to Hamilton. No one was injured, officials reported.

Workers of two wrecking crews worked all night placing the train on the tracks while others repaired the damage. The regular morning, north-bound passenger train completed the run about an hour late.
