THEY WANT IT TO RUN

Except for one important change, Canada's used car market is holding up remarkably well, reports The Financial Post's motor editor. The change: the day is over when car-hungry customers would fight to buy any old pile of iron. "To day the public is getting quite picky," said a large Toronto dealer. "We began noticing the change this spring. We can still sell an old car if it's in good shape out the junk is out." By "old", he meant 1939 and back. Heaps that used to bring $225-$250 are now being sold to wreckers

In A Country Lane

By Lillian Collier Gray
