> But why should the police or the city fathers disturb themselves? Quite obviously we have more goods than the cat-burglar. If he had as much as we, it is said to be assumed, he would be satisfied and leave ours alone. That at least would be the burglar's argument. But we argue in rebuttal that we land and Mr. Gowland. worked and earned to provide these things, and the thief didn't. seems to us an unassailable argument. What is ours is ours. It is the basis on which our civilization rests. So, to jail with the burglar, and good enough for him too.

But sometimes, in our corporate capacity, we think differently.
