Dendrochronology Requires Experts

BBC reporter Rene Cutforth recently talked about a new aid for archaeologists which had the alarming name of dendrochronology. This long-sounding name has a simple meaning, telling the date by means of trees. Because of dendrochronology, an archaeologist can now find out the date of any level of soil he is working in provided there is a suitable piece of wood embedded in it.

It has been known for a very long time that the age of a tree can be told by counting the rings in the wood but it has now been discovered that the thickness of the rings varies slightly and these variations make a unique pattern over a period of years.

The pattern made in trees that were growing between say 500 and 520 A.D. will never occur again in an exactly similar way and has never occurred before. The reason for this is a simple one, no set of 20 summers and winters ever had precisely the same fluctuations of weather as any other set of 20.

A. W. G. Lowther is the only man in Britain who is an expert on the archaeological aspect of tree rings. Since the war he has tabulated and arranged tree ring patterns over the centuries from about 150 B.C. to the end of the Roman period and late Saxon times, from about 400 to 800 A.D.

His method is to collect specimens of ancient timber of known date—beams from churches or wood found in association with objects that date it—and then to draw graphs of the thickness of variation in the rings. He can possibly tabulate a whole century from one piece of wood, and by arranging ring patterns from trees whose long lives have overlapped he eventually gets a whole series.

A REPLY FROM

United Co-operatives of Ontario

Certain reports have been published recently about the political activity and sympathies of the leadership of two co-operatives in North Ontario which is of some concern to the Co-operative Movement as a whole because of the danger that it will be tarred with the same brush. Political action or support of political parties has been contrary to co-operative principles since 1844, notwithstanding the obvious fact that in some cases individual co-operatives have chosen to go their own way. But the exception proves the rule and particularly so in Ontario, both in the North and the South. The clearest expression of this is seen in the fact that neither of the co-operatives referred to in these reports is a member of The Co-operative Union of Ontario which represents the vast majority of Ontario's co-ops. The business done by these two co-operatives is less than one half per cent. of the total co-operative business of the Province. And they are only two of the 600 co-operatives doing business here in equal competition with the other 25 thousand corporations in the same area.

Since the Royal Commission on Co-operatives published its report in 1946 a number of amendments to the Income Tax Acts has put co-operatives on the same income tax basis as all other comparable businesses, a development with which the Co-operative Movement was in agreement.

No reference has been made in these reports to the many other co-operatives in these areas which are non-political and in particular to co-operatives in Timmins and the Lakehead of equal size to those mentioned, which are entirely opposed to the practices referred to.

It is worth noting that the International Co-operative Alliance, federating the Co-operative Unions of all democratic countries, denies membership to co-operative groups supporting totalitarian ideologies, specifically those operating behind the Iron Curtain.
