TWO TYPES OF DEALERS

I recently heard a dealer acquaintance who had moved from a very large city to a medium size place explain the difference between the two.

He summed it up by saying that in his large city dealership he rarely knew his customers personally and almost never met them socially.

But since moving to a smaller center the opposite was now true — he seldom DOESN'T know the people who are buying from him.

Quite a few on a first name basis and many as personal friends. He admitted that he now felt compelled to be scrupulously honest with his customers for the obvious reason that if he ran his business any other way word would soon get around and his business would suffer.

This basic truth about the car business accounts for the fact that a "wheel and deal", to use the trade slang, can't operate successfully in a small town or city. He must pull buyers from miles around, usually on a basis of misleading price ads or similar gimmick claims.

It logically follows that since he doesn't expect to see his customers again (the distance involved quickly discourages driving back for service or complaints) this type of dealer considers his out-of-town buyers fair game for every type of corner cutting that will squeeze an extra dollar of profit out of the sale.

If you deal out of your own town or city with this type of operator on the understandable desire to "save" a few dollars, you are likely to regret it, as thousands of buyers who have will testify.

Foil C.N.R. Theft Truck is Stolen

Thieves struck twice over the weekend within the space of 24 hours. An attempted safe-cracking was foiled at the C.N.R. station next to the P. L. Robertson Company.

The safe which had been attacked with a hammer, spike and bar was almost completely wrecked, but was unopened. They fared a little better in a car theft. Some person or persons made off with a truck owned by the John Kirilo of Hamilton which was parked at Milton Motor Sales.

Firemen Sit Tight On Tax Payments

Haltos' firefighters and the Income Tax Bureau are currently deadlocked in their fight over firemen paying income tax on expense money received from fighting fires.

A letter from Haltos M.P. Sandy Best to Haltos Mutual Aid co-ordinator Chief Doug Wilson of Oakville advised Chief Wilson to do nothing about the income tax order for the present, as the government was looking into the matter.

The firemen are crossing their fingers and hoping the matter will be dropped. They made inquiries in other Ontario centres, and learned that only firemen served by the Hamilton bureau of the internal revenue department are being asked to pay tax on their brigade expenses.
