Time Spent Taking Soil Samples Repays Farmers $10-$20 Per Hour

One of the main jobs on Halton farms at this time of the year should be the taking of soil samples. The fall months are an excellent time to take soil samples. The spring rush is avoided and recommendations are received in time to place fertilizer orders early.

Soil testing is an important link between soil and crop research and individual practice. Behind a soil test and the resultant recommendation lies a great deal of soil chemistry and fertility research by agricultural colleges and experiment stations. Much of this work has been carried out in closely controlled field and laboratory experiments during the past 10 or 15 years. Someone has aptly stated, "The time a farmer spends taking soil samples can be the most profitable few hours in the entire year."

What is the return to the farmer for time spent taking and submitting soil samples? It could be $10-$20 or more per hour, depending on the crop to be grown. This is due to the use of recommended rates and ratios of plant nutrients.

HERE'S AN IDEA for homeowners who have roof drainpipes running down the side of their home to the ground. Why not camouflage it in a trellis like this Transcona, Manitoba homeowner did. Transcona recently ordered eavestrough down spouts must be extended to alleviate basement and sewer flooding during heavy rains. Milton council recently discussed flooding in subdivision areas, and asked homeowners to extend eavestrough downspouts at least four feet from the foundation to prevent excessive water entering the sewer system through foundation tile.
