Young People Conduct Service Farewell Party for Andy Franks

Ebenezer Young People had complete charge of the church service on Sunday morning. Susan Ward presided at the organ. Stella O'Gorman and Albert Blom rendered "Mansion over the Hill-top" as a duet.
The speakers, Murray Fatt and Gerard Blom, discussed the pros and cons of capital punishment. Murray was in favor of abolishing it on the grounds that it brutalized society, is no deterrent to murder and it makes it impossible to rehabilitate the criminal.
Life is sacred, since God made man in his own image. If a wanton killer does not repent when the sentence of death is upon him, he certainly will not with 50 years of prison ahead of him.
Gerard stated that there are 59 abolitionists, 49 retentionists and 60 undecided in Parliament. France and Spain are the only countries east of the Iron Curtain which still retain capital punishment and that only on a limited scale.
The exception to the use of capital punishment should be treasonable conduct during war. In the 18th century, there were 240 crimes including theft, adultery and heresy, punishable by death.
Capital punishment is an archaic custom. Of 2,500 capital murders annually in the United States, there are only about 30 executions.
Others taking part in the service were Winnifred Dunbar, Carol Freeman, Lloyd Lucas and Rob Blvth. The Young People also formed the choir.
