Burns Nature Trail

Looking out onto the reservoir through an old wooden fence

If you like to walk in the woods — but not too far — the Burns Nature Area just northwest of Campbellville might be an ideal spot.

A nature trail, which will eventually be about a mile and a half long, is being developed by the Halton Region Conservation Authority at the Burns Reservoir.

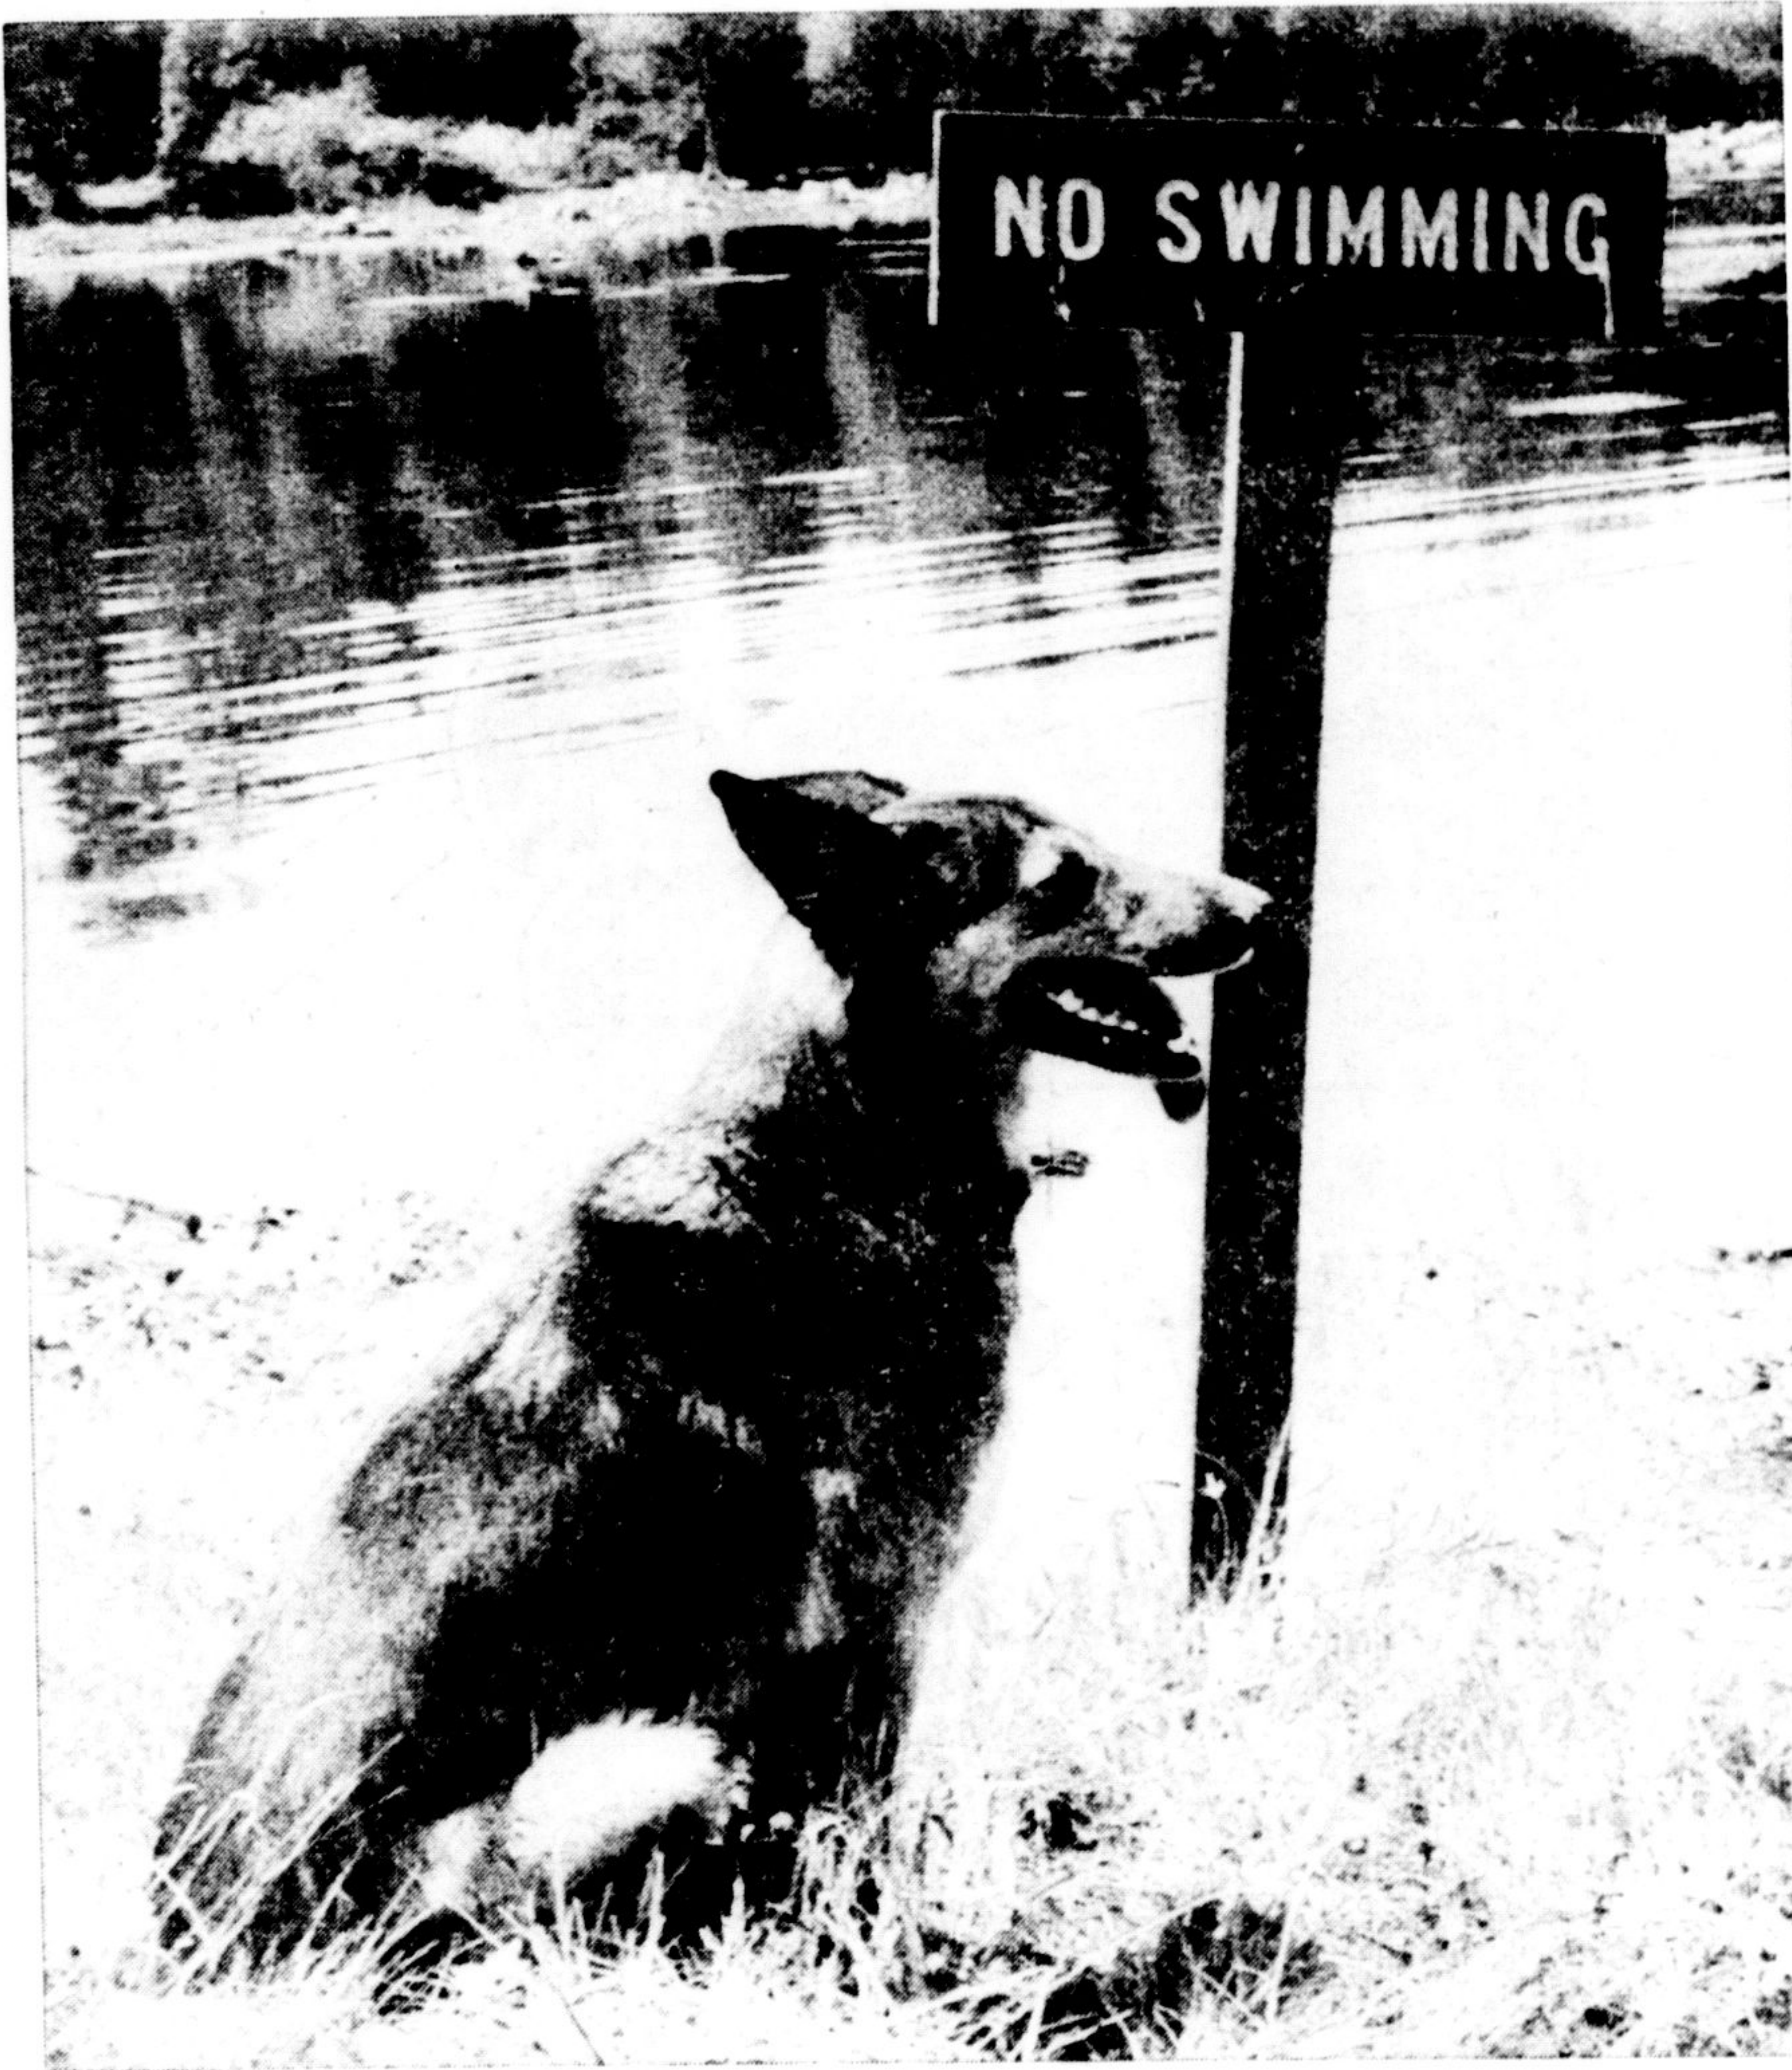

Although "no swimming" signs have been posted, the thickly treed area seems ideal for picnickers and picnic tables have been set up. Cedars, white pines, sugar maples, elms and even a willow can be found on the trail which has been developed for about one-quarter of a mile, so far.

Helene Balaban, who is working at the Conservation Authority office in Milton during the summer, has charted the trail and Authority workmen have cut out the path, which so far circles the reservoir.

Due to the hot summer and lack of rain, the water level in the reservoir is down about four or five feet, but looking through the trees onto the back of the reservoir there is still an interesting view.

The nature area is open to the public and a few area residents have been visiting it during the summer months. A portion of the parking area has been completed and when the trail is finished, signs will be erected along the mile and a half long route.

The area is located north-west of Campbellville. Visitors should turn left on the first sideroad north of Mohawk Raceway and proceed west along the road for three or four miles. The area is located on the righthand side and is marked by a sign.

No swimming is allowed, not even for pet dogs, but the area is ideal for picnics
