Since some students do not use their talents during the school year, they troop home on "report card day" weeping and moaning at the results. It is resonably evident that the time between April and Early June is vital to the academic success of an aspiring student.

Under the capable direction of Mrs. MacArthur, this play, by Oscar Wilde, is an effective satire on almost all the serious espects of common life in the Victorian Era. The play ridicules the serious and depicts the trivial as being serious. It is estimated that the play's expenses at each showing amounts to more than 200 dollars, notwithstanding the
