Roy Haley, Georgetown's police chief for 12 years, has resigned from the force. He has held the position since the town reinstituted a local force after having the OPP in charge for some years. In a letter read at a special meeting, Mr. Haley said that because of ill health, he was resigning from the force effective immediately. Subsequently council passed a motion which will continue the chief's pay and benefits under a municipal sickness and accident policy until the end of the year plus a lump sum of $600 within 10 days after Jan. 11, 1968. It was the third special meeting within two weeks to discuss police affairs. Mon. July 31, at a specially called meeting prior to the regular meeting Mr. Haley was reinstated as police chief. He had been suspended June 2 at a meeting at which the Ontario Police Commission was asked to conduct an investigation into his conduct and performance. The chief had requested such an investigattion in January, claiming his ability as administrator had been questioned on numerous occasions in the past two years. Members discussed a recommendation to the Ontario Police Commission which has been asked to appoint a local police commission which will handle police matters in town in future. The commission, established by by-law at the July 31 meeting, will comprise the mayor, a county judge and one other its fall sittings, Burlington could soon have a radio station. An application last March by directors Ernest Hennessey and William Logan of Burlington and Loren Cassina of London has been cleared by the Department of Transport and forwarded to the broadcasting board. Mr. Hennessey said that station plans "middle of the road modern music with a fair smattering of conpublic service aspect of the station will also be stressed. "We felt there is a need for a station in Burlington," he commented, "especially with the commercial growth of the town. There is no other comradio station." He added that with the station geared to local interests, he saw no trouble in picking up an audience. The station will broadcast in the daytime only on the 1090 21c-tf band if approved.
