

MILTON ROTARIANS shared an austerity meal with District Governor Gerry Woll when he made his official visit to the local club on Tuesday of last week. Water, celery and sandwiches were shared with the extra funds being raised for a district fund for international aid. Warns regional government studies will break up Halton

A current study of regional government on a county basis may force the break-up of the county, Deputy- Reeve W. Gillies of Oakville warned Halton County Council last week.

Mr. Gillies noted Burlington had recently studied the possibility of city status and Oakville was currently preparing a similar study. He recounted that Peel county representatives were not satisfied with a proposal from that county which would put regional government at the county level.

The Oakville deputy proposed a meeting of all members of the county council to receive the views of members. "If we go for a single county unit, all we would be doing is shoring up the county government and I don't think it can be done", he declared.

Reeve H. Hinton of Acton defended the county committee's ability to prepare background information for submission to the county council. "We're not surveying to present the county", he noted. "As an individual Oakville and Burlington city status. The Municipal Affairs definite lack of granting city declared."

Campbellville plans own fire substation

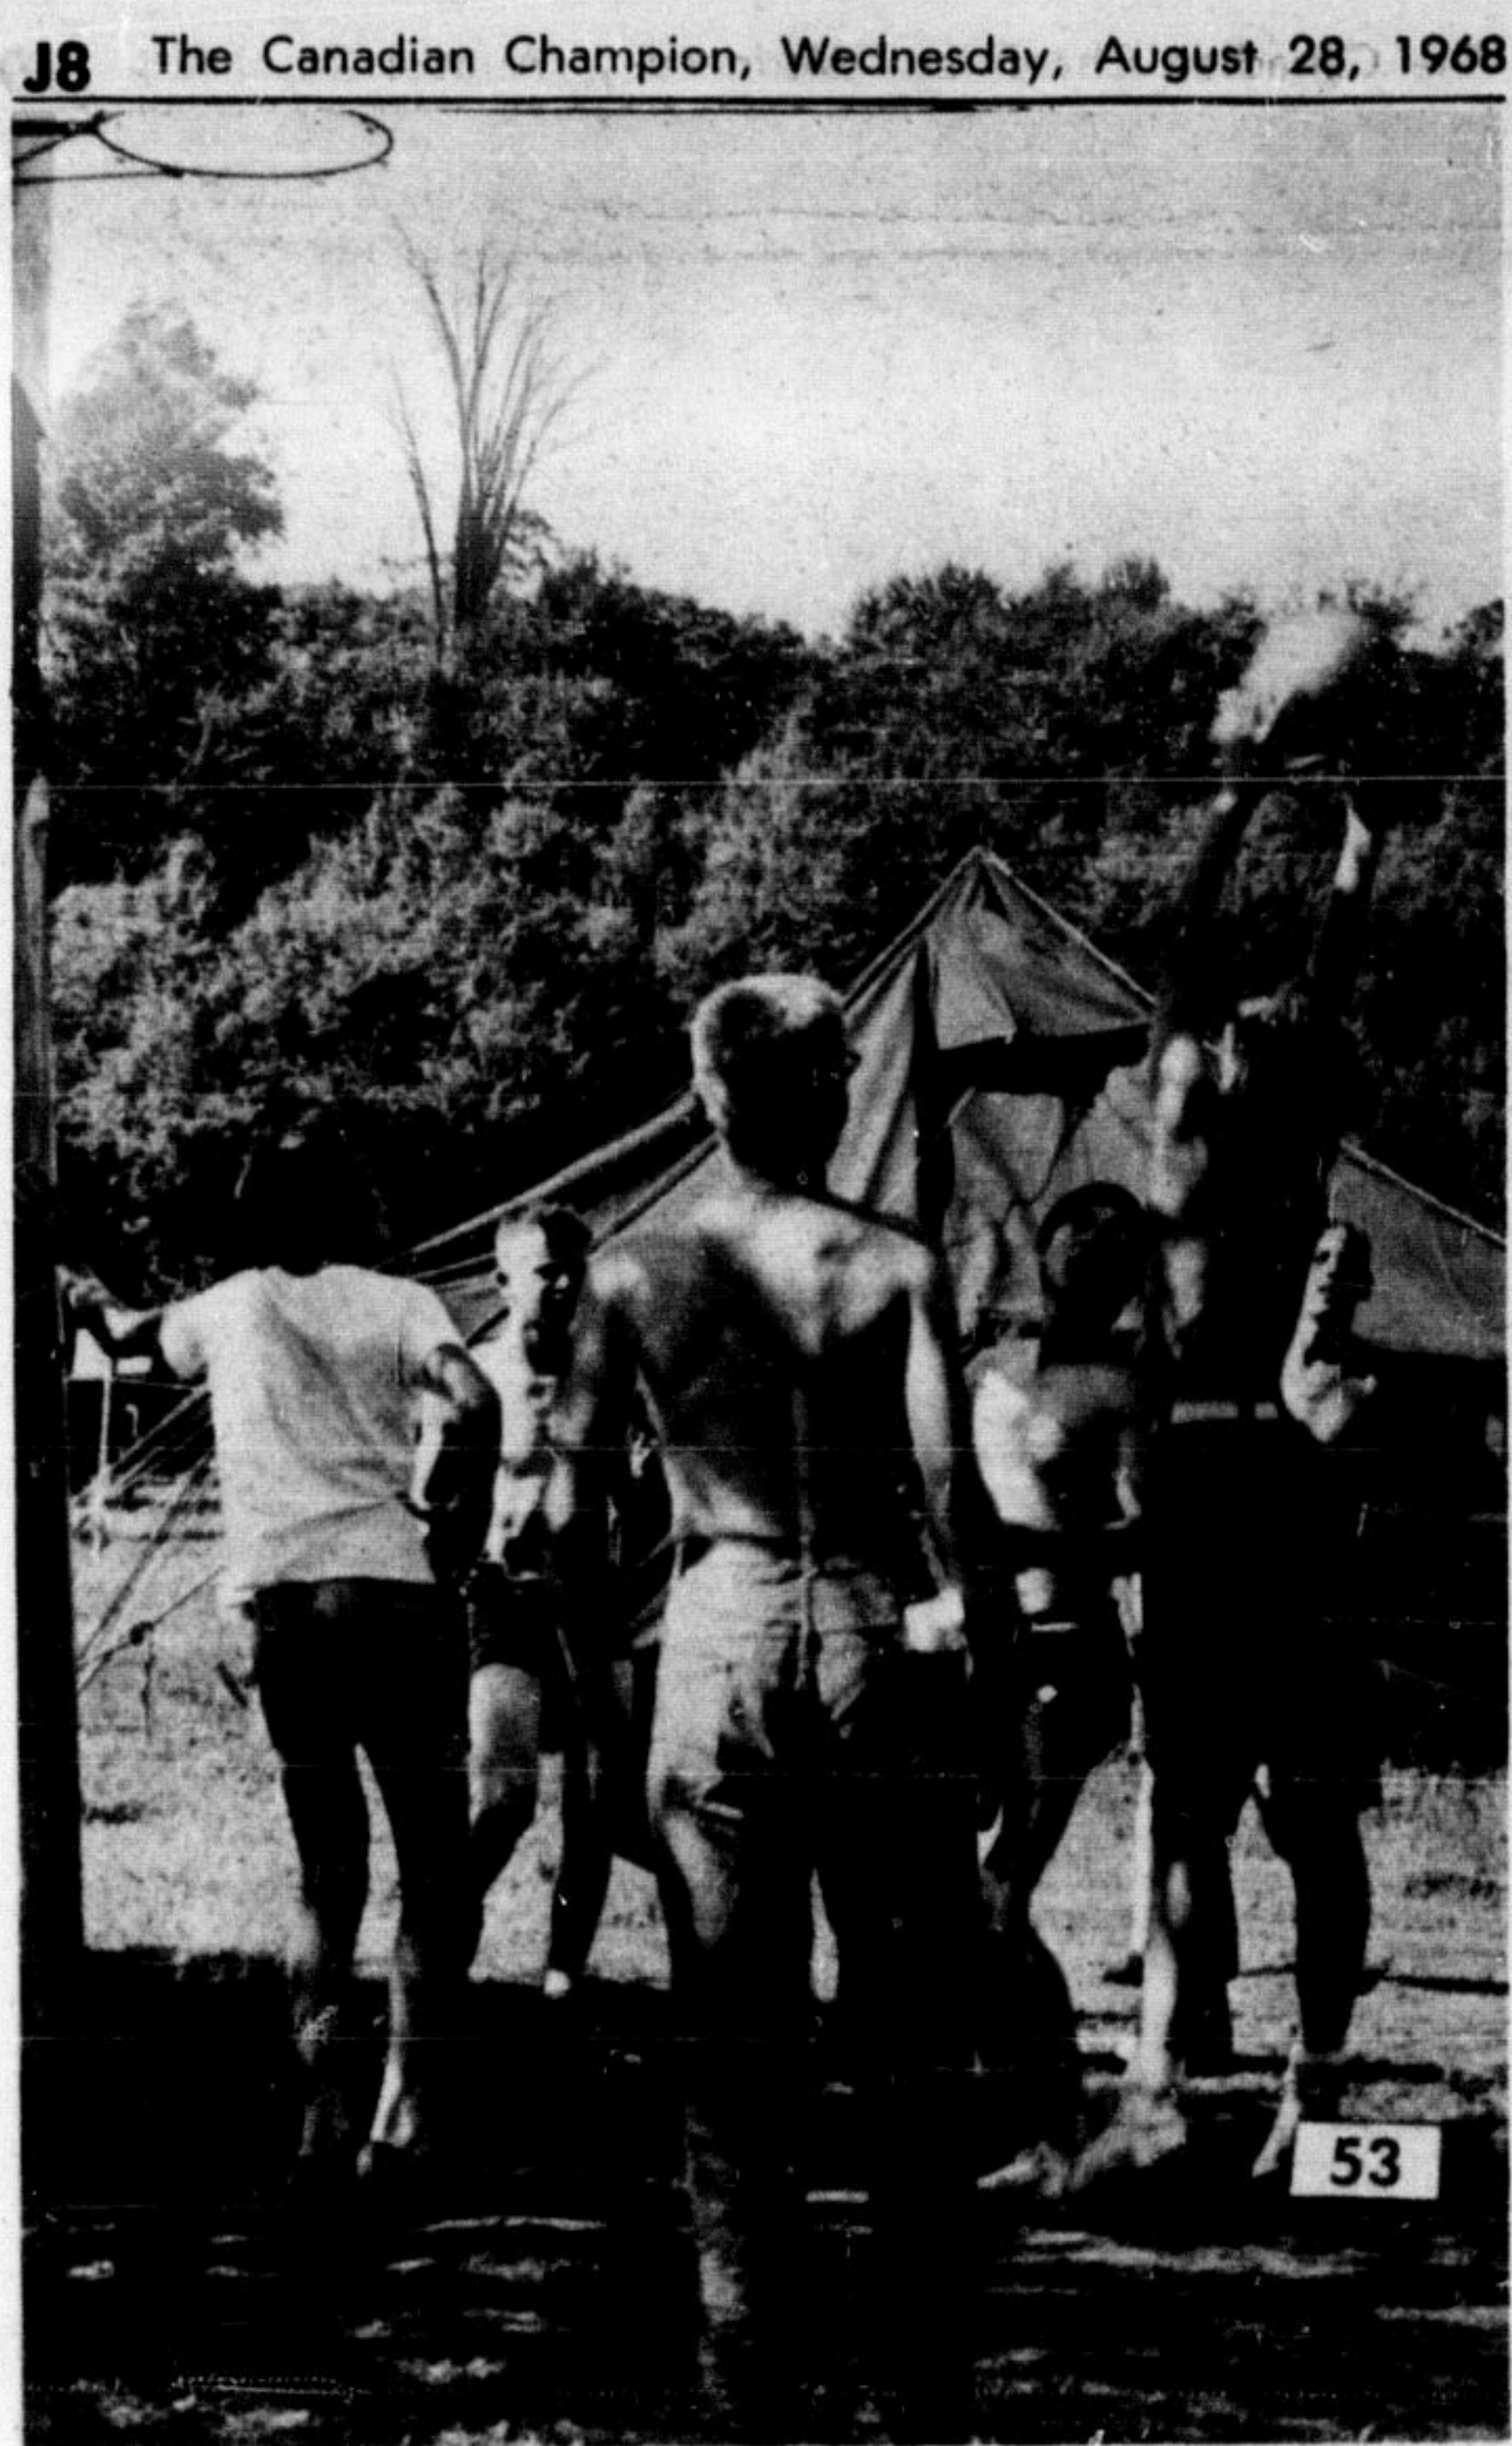

Nassagaweya Council learned Monday of a plan for the Village of Campbellville to set up a substation for the Milton Fire Department. Trustees of the village Robert Elliott and Gordon Agnew explained they had a suitable building adjacent to Early's Garage and asked permission to put a 1,000 gallon water tank on a truck.

Mr. Elliott said the first 10 minutes of any fire was crucial, and although the Milton brigade has always been prompt a small brigade right on hand could be very helpful.

Mr. Agnew pointed out fire insurance rates would drop for a five mile radius of the village if they had a substation to the Milton Department.

A committee from council was appointed to meet with a delegation from the new brigade and a representative from the Ontario Firefighters Association to set up the substation.

WHETHER YOU WHITTLED, dribbled or liked model trains, there was something of interest to everyone at the Jamboree at Kelso last week — boys, leaders and visitors enjoyed it immensely. Above in Photo 53, a group gets some exercise in a game of basketball in the sports field. Whittlers' World, Photo 54, was a great place on a rainy day where the boys experimented with knives and soft wood, and turned in some excellent wood sculptures. This was part of the Do-It-Den which was a highly popular place with most of the boys. On the right in Photo 26, Scouts and Sea Scouts rally together to erect a tent on the opening day of the week-long Jamboree. Below in Photo 7, Jamboree staffer Len Green, a Toronto Venturer, works on his excellent model train display at the Do-It-Den.

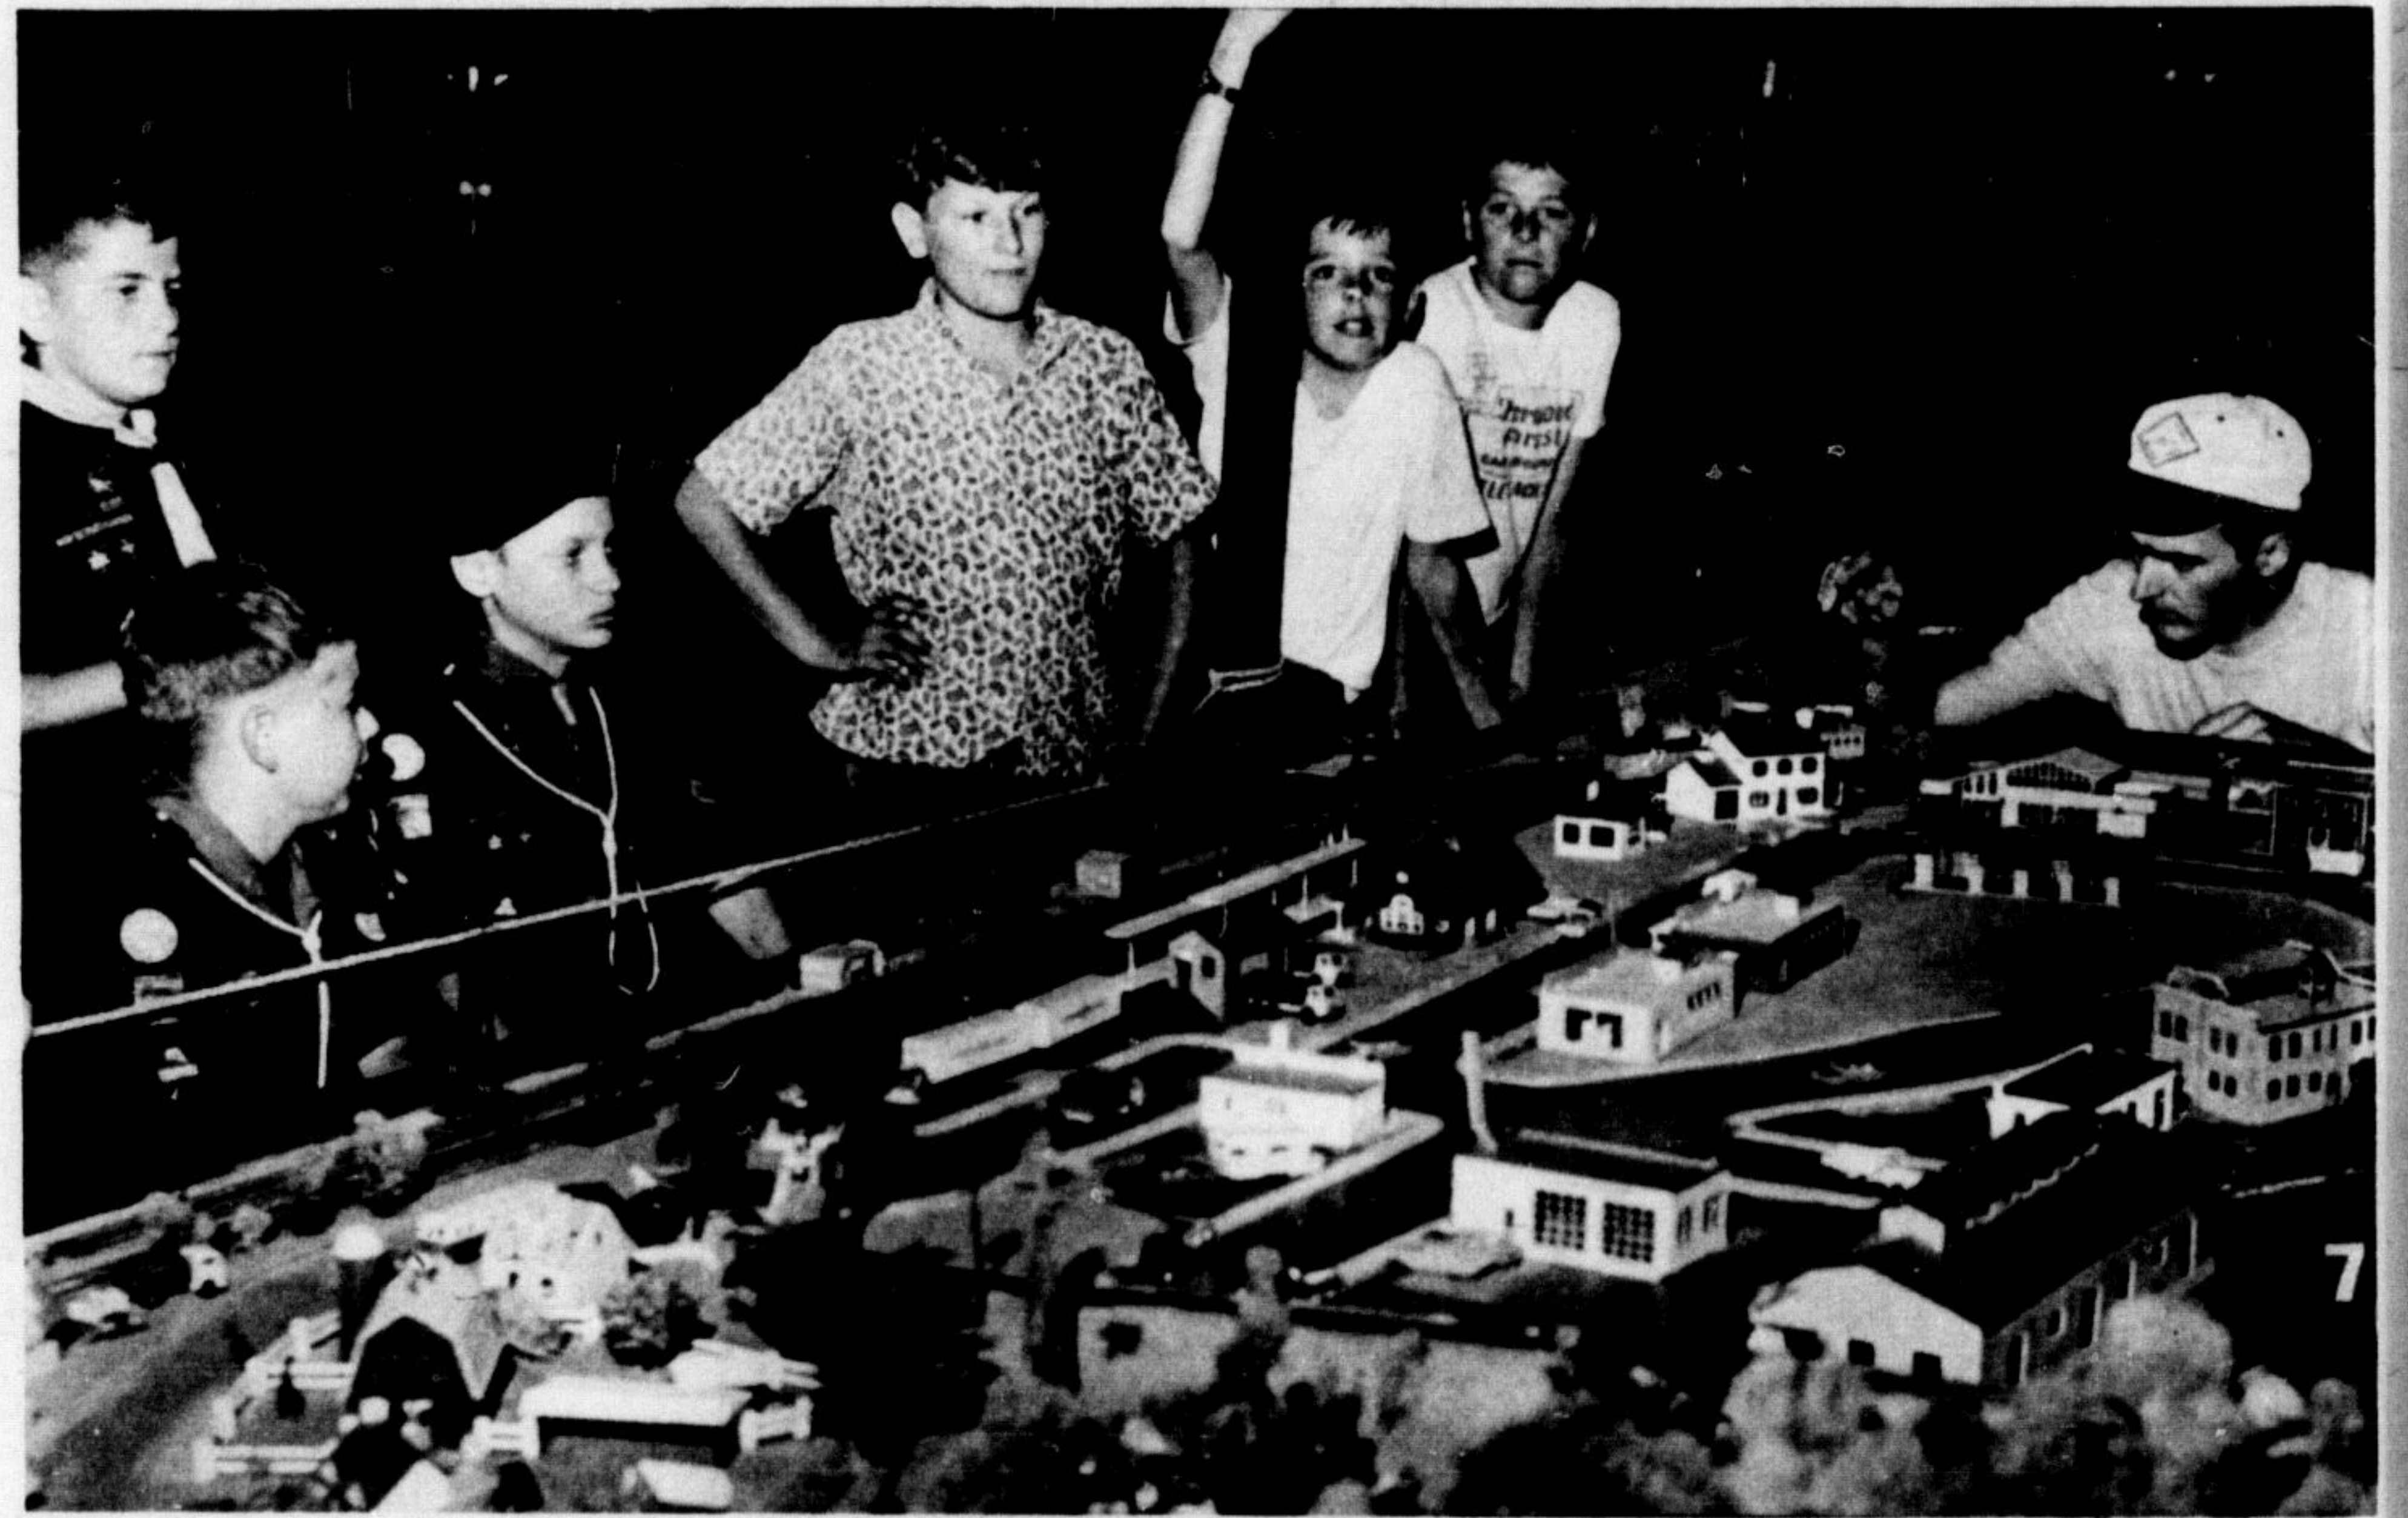

Jamboree Journal

* Everywhere you went, you ran into a Rothwell from Kitchener. Herb was at the swim area, his wife was in the canteen, so was daughter Janice, and sons Greg and Steven were out in Subcamp Three. (Janice says only four boys forgot to ask her for a date. All the rest acted like normal teenagers.)

* Trains running all day and night on the nearby C.P.R. track bothered some campers, but not Jack Barton of Bolton, who was fire chief in the security department all week. "Just like music to my ears," said Jack. In civvy life, he's the C.P. station agent back home in Bolton.

* Maybe it happened more than once, but I heard about one troop which set up its entire district campsite in the wrong spot on opening day. The error was discovered after the tented complex and a fancy gate and entranceway were nearly completed, when the troop supposed to be using that site arrived in camp. Thanks to the latecomers' generosity, the entire campsite did not have to be dismantled and moved—they stayed right there. That's "brotherhood" for you.

* Ah, there's nothing like coming back from the muddy obstacle course and stepping into a cold shower, fully clothed, is there?

* B. C. Thunderbirds troop didn't report any head injuries. They arrived at the Jamboree wearing hard safety helmets. On Thursday, which will probably go down in the books as "Gusty Thursday" they flew 15 helium-filled balloons and their provincial flag over the campsite.

* A sign in the Do-It-Den listed the wide variety of activities open to fun-seeking boys, and concluded with a suggestion that "if you don't see it, just ask." Beneath which some wag had pencilled in the query, "where are the girls?"

* The California gang sought new pen pals during their stay in camp. All the notice boards featured the western state's beautiful postcards, a name and address and a plea for correspondents. It may be the start of a lot of lasting friendships. * The Bendale contingent invited guests to a chili supper Thursday. Niagara Scouts held a "Niagara Night" Wednesday featuring a campfire, singsong and free grape juice.

* As the stock market broadcasters might say, "trading was active" in the first few days of camp as thousands of badges changed ownerships. By the end of the week most swappers had swapped themselves out of swappables.

* Booty collectors had a hey-day at the Jamboree. One
