HOPE

for Canada's quarter of a Million sufferers

Rheumatoid arthritis is not a killer disease. It is a crippling disease. It cripples the pay cheque and the pocket book. It cripples the ability to communicate; it cripples opportunities to become educated. It cripples home life, religious life, and cultural attainments.

When it strikes, there is pain, fear of deformity — and often despair. But today there is help and hope through The Canadian Arthritis and Rheumatism Society. Help through its continuing program of patient care. Hope through its determined research.
