

Speculation rife about jetport in this area

Speculation is rife locally and in the district that this area could be chosen for a supersonic jetport to replace already obsolete Toronto International Airport.

Sources have indicated that the federal-provincial committee is looking favorably at a site described only as being east of Guelph. Soil tests are being conducted in this area as well as three or four other sites.

In 1968 the federal and provincial governments formed a joint committee to find a new site for an airport that could handle the new intercontinental supersonic jets. Originally the government had planned to expand the Malton site but protests from residents and council, particularly Etobicoke, forced a change of plans.

Transport Minister Donald Jamieson told the Commons last week that the committee had narrowed the choice of suitable sites down to four or five after considering almost 60 different proposals.

A number of criteria are being applied to the remaining four or five sites to determine the best location. Until a final decision is made, the minister said he will make no announcement about the location being considered, to prevent land speculators from driving up the cost.

The government will ultimately purchase 50,000 to 80,000 acres for the airport.

Mr. Jamieson did not rule out the possibility that the present airport at Malton could be expanded if none of the other sites picked proved worthwhile.

The government is studying passenger origin and destination, aviation and technology, the ability of the various areas to accept airport noise and handle pollution, ecological, topographical and water and sewage problems that a mammoth airport could create.

A final selection will not be made until late fall, the minister stated, but already there is plenty of speculation about the location. A recent radio interview with an official from the Department of Transport extracted the information that the search for a suitable site had extended from Acton to Uxbridge.

Probably the most forbidding obstacle to an international jetport in this area is the presence of the Niagara escarpment which cuts right through Halton County like a sash. Some of the best farm land in the country lies below the escarpment. Rough, rocky land lies above the escarpment.

Rolling hills seem to rule out a jetport in Erin or Caledon townships while land further afield could be too far from the large centres of population. Land too close to Toronto would have an immense price tag.

Certainly, most speculators agree, the site chosen will have easy access to Toronto and be a transportation hub.

Reports are also being circulated that speculators are making massive land grabs near Mount Forest on the rumor that the airport would locate near that town of 2,000. One Toronto company is rumored to have purchased upwards of 1,500 acres of land at better than market price.

Meanwhile the chairman of the Halton Region Conservation Authority has pledged to fight any plans for a super jetport in Halton County, especially where the land falls under the Authority's jurisdiction. Toronto Mayor William Dennison said last week that one potential site is near Milton.

And so the speculation goes with an authoritative body of opinion convinced the new super duper airport will end up somewhere in this vicinity.

Typhoid ship sails

William Woods, the Milton man who was detained in a typhoid quarantine aboard the luxury liner Oronsay at Vancouver, B.C. for 21 days, remained aboard the ship as it sailed for Australia Wednesday of last week. He is planning to complete his round-the-world cruise.

His daughter Mrs. John Conway, Tremaine Rd., says his letters report he was "quite comfortable" and found lots to do while marooned on board the ship at Vancouver harbor for three weeks. He took art lessons, played bridge, and spoke several times by telephone to friends Mr. and Mrs. Charles Laundon who are formerly of Milton. One day he and some of the 1,500 passengers boarded buses for a driving tour of Vancouver, although they were not allowed off the buses.

Just when he'll be back home is hard to say. Oronsay officials haven't yet indicated how much of the proposed cruise may be eliminated following the three-week holdup.

Area woman escapes injury

A Georgetown woman escaped injury when her car skidded off the Appleby Line, north of the Base Line Rd. on Monday, Feb. 2.

According to Milton OPP, the car driven by Judith Middlebro, 26, slid off the road and into a telephone pole, doing $300 damage to the car.

Outside town Okay water connection

A water connection to serve a property outside Milton was approved by Milton Council Monday.

The half inch connection was granted Laszlo Juhasz whose home on 10 Sideroad west of Milton was destroyed by fire on September 30.

Recommending approval of the application, Councillor Charles Fay said the committee felt water was available now for this type of service and at double the rate charged in-town consumers, it would pay its way.

Councillor Charles Johnson questioned the move, citing it as a change in previously established policy. He observed it could encourage small scale subdivision development on the perimeter of the town. Granting the request before council would be setting a precedent, he maintained.

Councillor Art Melanson suggested the application was an isolated case and in regional

Brother, sister capture public speaking awards

It was a night of tension for 17 youngsters from Holy Rosary School as they waited to find out the winners of the school's public speaking contest.

Sponsored by the school, the Friday contest featured three categories for the speakers; junior, intermediate and senior. Interspersed between each category were songs, skits and dances by other children from the school.

Finally the big moment of the evening came and the final winners were announced. Senior winner was Jeannie Duignan and her brother John made it a family affair by capturing first place in the junior competition. Rosanna Marcantonio walked off with first place in the intermediate contest.

On hand to present the junior prize was Mrs. J. Lewin, intermediate first place prize was given by Mrs. Joseph McCann, of the Catholic Women's League, who also presented the participation prizes while the senior first place prize was presented by O. Hadley representing Ontario Hydro.

Judges for the evening were Mrs. O. Hadley, J. Lewin and Miss Diane Johnson.

Second place in the senior competition went to Mark Bradley while Nancy Nova placed third. Others entered in this category were Sergio Mazzerato and Denise McCann. Colleen Tonelli took second place in the intermediate competition and Joan McIlwraith placed third. Gerald VanWouw, Maureen Devlin and Todd Corradetti were the other entrants.

Second place junior was Rosemary Windmoller while third went to Crystal Chuchmak. Others entered were Mike Vanoorschoot, Mary Anne Poland and Marisa Piccini.
