A resounding decision

Jim Snow and George Kerr won resounding victories in the provincial election. Such confidence is personally rewarding but it is also challenging in the extent of the responsibility it carries.

Pundits analyze results like those of last week's election looking for the magic formulas to be applied elsewhere.

The results, we suggest, simply represented the voters' desire for strong leadership, for a traditional approach to problems and for a desire not to be misled by promises.

Many will disagree with that analysis but the leadership which Bill Davis demonstrated indicated he could make tough decisions. Those decisions were not universally popular but voters saw decision rather than procrastination. This was in an economic and technological climate where change is rampant and where we are inclined to feel more comfortable in things familiar.

Both the Liberal and NDP leaders dotted the early days of their campaign with promises while the PC leader remained devoid of promises. Today's voter considers blatant promises attempts to buy his vote. It was not until the end of the campaign that Bill Davis made any new commitments. By that time most voters had already made up their mind on the basis of other conclusions.

The actions of the leaders played a large part in the local campaigns but the work of local candidates cannot be overlooked. They worked hard. They faced countless meetings, shook hundreds of hands and poured themselves into the task of presenting issues and challenges. We're all the better for it when democracy is so actively being exercised.

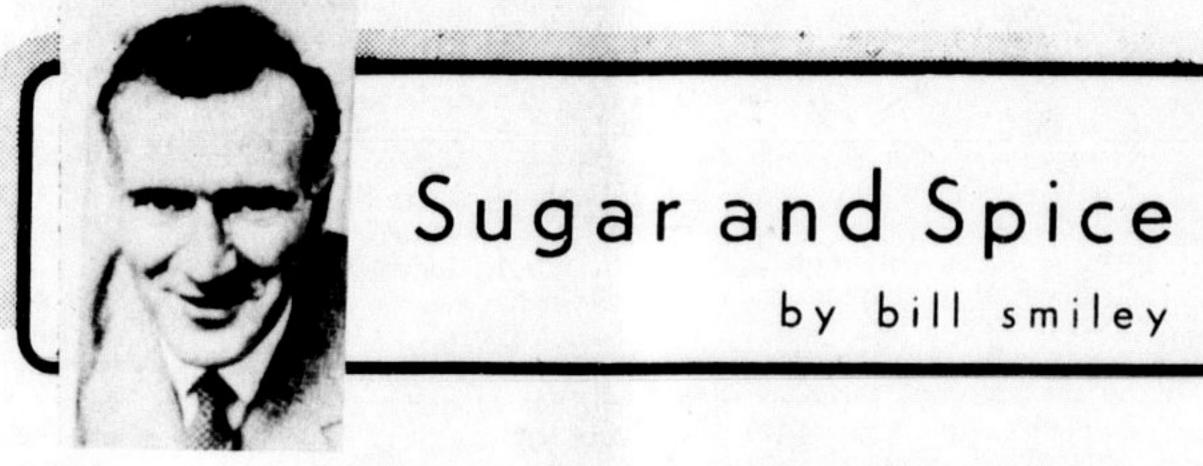

We congratulate the winners. Neither is faultless but we have never sought an answer to a question that we couldn't contact them. They know the local geography and they know the problems, and we feel certain they will represent their ridings well.

Our thanks to the losers whose efforts made the whole contest possible. At personal sacrifice they invested themselves in maintaining the effectiveness of democracy.

bornly resisted the town's application on any land, including that area west of Milton where residents have recently indicated they still want to be part of Milton.

Had the western area been part of the annexation granted to the town, the costs of planning and service projections could have been borne as part of the total package. Instead they were isolated through Oakville's resistance and today an annexation of that area just doesn't seem practical.

There may be a day when Milton will need the acreage to the west for its further development plans, but in the meantime the costs of annexation with its parade of events that must follow would be foolish for the town to instigate.

It seems, if we are to believe the financial experts, that Canada is in for a tough time, economically. Them damyankees are at it again.

They are paying as much attention to our various trade missions and professional whiners as would a buffalo, charging toward a cliff, with a flea on his back screaming that he, too, would be killed if the buffalo went over the edge.

Well, as the fleas, we can't blame it on anybody but ourselves. It's been too comfortable, riding around on the back of that big, fat, juicy buffalo. Better we should have been wasps, stinging instead of sucking.

Now we know how the Esquimaux and the Indians feel about the rest of us.

Newspaper editorials are crying the blues, telling the government to do something about it, or trying to assure their readers that the U.S. is not out to "get" us.

They might as well save their type. It's too late for crying; there's no use telling the present government to do anything about anything; and the U.S. is not interested in "getting" us; it is interested in getting itself out of the worst economic mess it has been in since the thirties.

Writers of letters-to-the-editors are offering some emotional, but largely irrational advice to anyone who will listen. Some would cut the Yanks off from all our resources. That would be like cutting off your nose to improve your appearance.

Others would seize, or seriously police, all American subsidiary companies in Canada. That would result in further unemployment as the Yanks started closing plants, many of them heavily subsidized by our own government, and started pulling in their horns.

Maybe a mouse can frighten an elephant, according to legend, but a rat can't stop a ship from sinking by threatening to jump overboard. And there's a lovely mixed analogy for you to ponder over.

To carry on with the cliches, Canadians are reaping what they have sown. For several generations, they have invited, nay, begged foreign capital to invest in this country. They have refused to invest in their own country, preferring something "safer", like Brazilian Traction or A.T. and T.

Result? The country is crawling with British, Swedish, German and American plants, directed from abroad. I wonder how many Canadian companies you would find operating successfully in any of those countries.

and eat it. We have all the ingredients for the cake. But rather than bake it ourselves, we send them to foreign bakers, buy it back from them, and find that it's mostly crumbs.

One more. You can't have it both ways.

Another cliche. You can't have your cake

You can't be half capitalist, half socialist. And if you want to play around with a giant among capitalists, like the U.S., you need more protection than an Alcan jock-strap. You don't send in your high school second-string juniors to play against the pros.

Have I a solution? Of course I have. This economic lecture wasn't prepared without deep thought and deeper research.

First, let's stop running around in everdecreasing circles, like that bird of legend. You know its fate.

Second, let's not bite the hand that feeds us. Unless that hand tries to give us a cuff on the ear. Then bite to hurt.

Third. Let's pull in our belts, get off our tails, and start competing with industrialists in other countries. In short, stop producing shoddy merchandise at inflated prices. I'll take a wage freeze, will you? Thus endeth the lesson.

The Mary Street storm sewer controversy has forced council to recommend a thorough study of sewer and water mains and parking facilities in the southern area of Milton's core and although it was a round-about way the decision was made to take a survey, it will be a beneficial project for the town. Council and neighboring merchants had reached an impasse over the Mary St. sewers and the majority of councillors were prepared to drop the subject despite veiled threats the landowners made to stop or delay the Queen and Thomas Sts. reconstruction project. Now it appears the study of Mary, Commercial, Charles and Pearl Sts. will overcome the merchants' objections and allow several projects to proceed.

Don't forget, clocks go back to Standard Time at 2 a.m. this Sunday when Daylight Saving Time ends. Remember, the clocks go BACK one hour. If you move your clock the wrong way you'll be rather early for church Sunday morning.

We continue to receive complaints, especially from Milton District Hospital patients, about the rubble that remains at the site of a burned home across Derry Rd. from the hospital. The house was levelled and so was a chimney that jutted into the air for some months after the fire. But the mess remains. Can't the owner clean it up? As one former hospital patient said the other day, "it would be better to look at a field of weeds than at that mess."

Milton's restaurants didn't win much favor with an Oakville family on a one-day fall outing through the beautiful countryside in North Halton. The family enjoyed the day but in a letter to the editor of an Oakville newspaper Mrs. Mary Lewis complained, "I recommend the restaurants in downtown Milton to nobody. We dropped into one place and what we got for our money was a shame.

To make matters worse the place was filled with unruly teenagers making fools of themselves."

I was right, and wrong, when I predicted Jim Snow would win Halton East riding with a 2,000-vote plurality on Thursday. And I was both right and wrong when I said George Kerr would take Halton West by 5,000 votes.

But I was right all the way when I predicted Bill Davis would sweep the province and return to greater power than before when the results of Thursday's provincial election were tallied.

Snow, of course, won by over 11,000 votes and Kerr romped home with a 17,000-vote lead over his closest challenger. So Downs gets marks for predicting their victories, even if this fuzzy-cheeked scribe was a little out on the size of the victories they recorded.

Who could have guessed in advance that Ontario would swing so fully behind Davis and his candidates? Not even Davis, Snow or Kerr will admit they foresaw any such landslide when election day rolled around.

Snow told me Thursday night he was fairly confident of a victory, but the big majority surprised even him. Kerr, who has been taking his lumps on the pollution and environment issues, was visibly worried about retaining his seat and was campaigning hard to keep it during the past couple of months.

Now for some analysis. Just why did the voters in Halton County give such rabid support to the two Tory candidates?

First, I feel the Snow and Kerr victories were part of a province-wide swing to Conservatism which in itself was a strong anti-NDP feeling. Taxpayers were worried about the radical policies espoused by Stephen Lewis and his cohorts and the creeping socialism they threatened to invoke if placed in power. But Bill Davis has kept his nose clean, he has had the gumption to make decisions, and he promised no "pie in the sky" if the voters saw fit to send him back as premier of our province.

The Liberals said 28 years was too long for one party to be in power and I can agree with that, if the incumbent government is doing wrong or doing nothing. But Davis' government is doing things and appears to be doing them right. Change, just for the sake of change is nonsence.

Second, Snow and Kerr have been good members of parliament, have worked hard and represented their ridings well. Though both hold cabinet posts which require extra sacrifices and more travelling than most MPPs, they never appear too busy to attend a local function or help a constituent with a problem.

Kerr's legal background fits him well for his work as minister of the environment and he appears to enjoy his role as a "white knight" charging after that perennial bad buy, "Mr. Pollution." Snow's background as a builder gives him added status as a member of the Ontario Housing Corporation board of directors and will stand in his favor if and when Davis names a minister of housing.

Two weeks ago I talked to an uncommitted voter who felt the NDP was too radical and the Liberals too middle-of-the-roadsy for him. He said he didn't really want to see the Conservatives returned to power but he feared an NDP government and just wasn't sold on the Liberals doing as good a job of running this province as the Tories have done. He planned to vote for the Davis administration because it was, in his words, "the least of three evils."

Thursday's election shows there were a lot more people in the same boat.

Certainly many voters in Halton East changed their minds after the 1967 election. Whether it was a reflection on Liberal candidate Bob Blake or an anti-Bob Nixon feeling, or whether the provincial Conservatives gained in stature after John Robarts quit and Bill Davis took up the reigns, remains to be seen. But in 1967 in Halton East there were 9,867 votes for Snow and 9,703 for the Liberal candidate while the NDP man polled 6,359. This time Snow got 21,000, the Liberal man just under 10,000 and the NDP a shade over 7,000.

There were 12,000 extra votes in the 1971 election over the 26,000 cast in 1967. Snow gained exactly 12,000 more votes last Thursday than we did four years ago. Not all those "new voters" could have voted for the Tory candidate so a lot must have switched from Liberal or NDP to Conservative in the past four years.
