Syrup not sweet enough

Halton Region Conservation Authority has this week been under attack for selling maple syrup with low sugar content at its Rattlesnake Point Park maple syrup demonstrations.

John Bush, forestry technician for the Authority told The Champion that a couple of days after the demonstration had begun, "just to be on the safe side," he enquired about the regulations pertaining to the sale of maple syrup at their shanty. He was told by the Ontario Department of Agriculture office in Milton that, as Mr. Bush puts it, "to the best of their knowledge there were no regulations governing the making and selling of maple syrup."

Legally, maple syrup must have a 65 per cent sugar content and a maximum of 35 per cent water. Upon receiving a complaint of "thin" syrup from a buyer, Walter Humphries, a maple syrup extension specialist for the Ontario Department of Agriculture and Food bought a sample about two weeks ago and tested it. He found the sample to contain only 45 per cent sugar and 55 per cent water, well below the required provincial standards.

Bush explains "We didn't realize the candy thermometer on the evaporator was not working. It was showing that the sugar content was up to par but consequently it wasn't."

The Authority has since replaced the candy thermometer and has been refunding the $2.50 per pint price to any buyers who bring the can of maple syrup bought at the demonstration back to the Authority's administration office on Main St. in Milton. Since the error was discovered and publicized last week, only half a dozen people have asked for refunds out of approximately 150 who purchased cans according to one spokesman.

Bush summed up the Authority's reaction when he told

The Champion, "The funny thing is, we made a point of having everyone sample it before buying it."
