New Year's warning Some people like to die

Funny how people like to die. To celebrate, they sit down with a group of friends, exchange some light conversation and put away as much alcohol as they can.

Then, after an enjoyable evening, they leave in one of two ways—either in good spirits, singing and joking, or something may irk them at the last moment and they'll leave the party with a chip on their shoulder—either way, they jump behind the wheel of their car and yell goodbye... for good.

Funny how some people have no intention of dying—but they do. They, too, go to a party, see all their friends, but they use their heads, watch how much they drink, and head for home, sober, alert. Then some drunk smashes head on into him and kills him. It's a crime.

This weekend, and the first two days of next week, including New Year's Eve, will be one of the most dangerous times of the year to drive a car in Canada.

Here are some hints on how you can avoid the drunk driver:

Pro drivers
Drive only if absolutely necessary. Park the car in the driveway Friday night, and leave it there until you go to work. If you do go partying, take a taxi. In most cases, they are professional drivers and are prepared and alert to the dangers of the holiday highways.

If you must drive, be prepared. Look ahead for possible trouble. You're sober, but what about that car coming towards you? In addition to just watching the road, look for possible escape routes. If the approaching car starts to drift into your lane, keep your eye on the shoulder of the road, looking for ways to get out of the way. When approaching an intersection, take your foot off the gas, look ahead, and keep your foot ready for the brakes.

Be patient. When you are surrounded on all sides by poor drivers, keep your cool. Accept the fact that not everyone is as good a driver as you, just take your time, relax, and watch the speed limit—an extra 10 miles an hour doesn't mean much time-wise, but it will throw you about 30 feet further through the front windshield when you hit that tree.

"Safe Driving is a Family Affair". With the kids home in bed, it's up to you to make sure that you and the other guy gets home to see them.

This past summer a week-long, clean-up canoe trip in Algonquin Provincial Park yielded 16 bags of garbage: mostly cans, bottles, broken glass and plastics. Two huge gear wheels, each weighing over 200 pounds, were hauled ashore from the bottom of North Tea Lake. A log jam in the Amable du Fond River yielded a torn rainsuit, a broken paddle and a plastic container of gasoline.

SNACKS
Bedtime snacks apparently have little effect upon how well one sleeps. Researchers in Milwaukee studied 36 volunteers who for a week consumed a snack of a 275-calorie cereal serving before retiring, then for a week omitted the snacks. No significant difference was found in the frequency of body movements, an index of sleep depth, nor how they said they had slept.
