divinely inspired, it was written by laymen for men, taking into account the prejudices of the day.

The question still nagging many theologians, Biblical scholars, priests and ministers today is whether or not to allow the ordination of women.

One thing still holding up progress is church tradition. Lucas said each denomination of the Christian church has its own tradition regarding women in the church.

The Common Room at Harmony Court was beautifully decorated on Friday, Dec. 8 as the Harmony Court tenants held their annual Christmas party.

A total of 28 sat down to a turkey meal prepared under the supervision of Mrs. Eves.

Bill Tight carved the bird. The table was decorated with Christmas-style adornments. Most of them were done by Mrs. May Kegan.

Following the meal, Christmas carols were sung by the group, accompanied by Mrs. I. Dick on the piano.

Bible," she said.

Many churches today have progressed in their attitude towards women but the minister said it depends on the church itself.

"It has only been recently that women have been allowed to represent their parish at the synod level. They have also been allowed to read lessons and prayers and even assist in the administration of communion," she said.

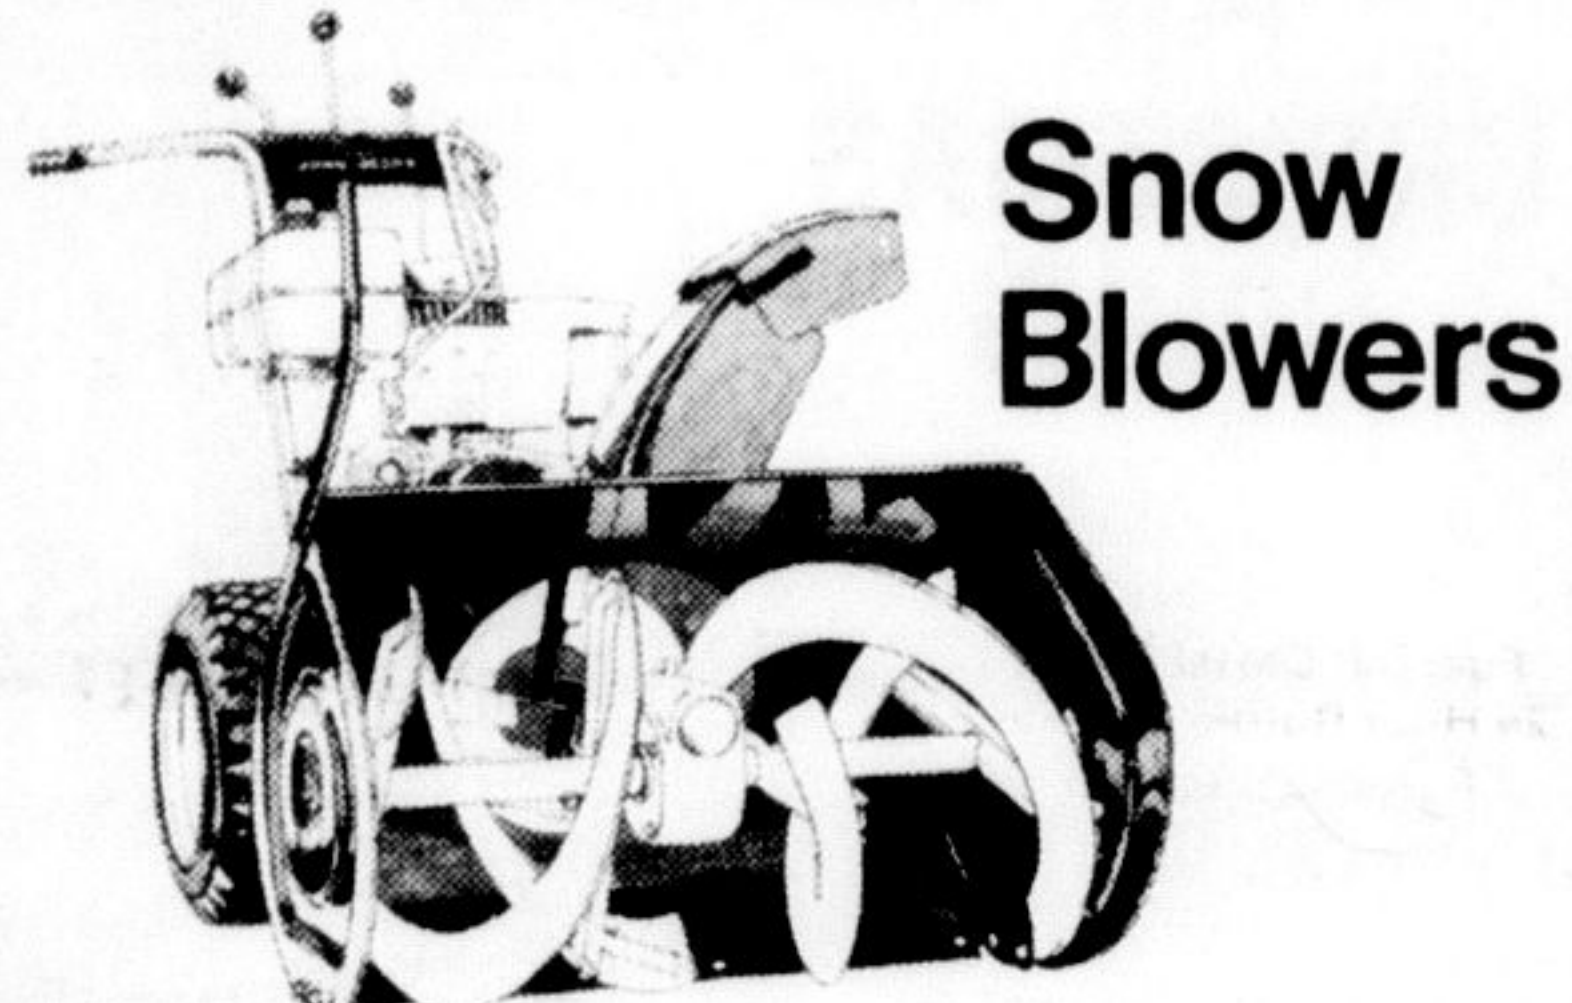

"The clergy has become less monarchical—thank goodness."

Women in the ministry have been linked with magic, mystery, and paganism.

God is a man, Christ is a man, men are the head of the family—so therefore man should be the head of the church—this attitude is still held by many people today.

Lucas' last word on the subject: "There'll be a lot of surprises in heaven."
