

ENOUGH IS ENOUGH! Five Miltonians pile onto an inner tube in preparation for taking off down a hill at Kelso during the winter carnival Sunday. They include Joe Brown, Brian Lisk, Glenn McBride, Bruce Lisk, D.J. Bergin and Mark Smith.

FOUR WHO DIDN'T MIND THE COLD Sunday were Siberian huskies Kisi, Kuyana and Mokie and their owner Ken Dudley of Scarborough. Mr. Dudley disdained gloves, having spent months living the the Northwest Territories with the Inuit.

MILTON FIREFIGHTERS Tony Taziar (centre) and Ross Mitchell (right) stand behind the chili pot amid swirling clouds of steam. Although the fire warmed them on one side, the wind chilled them on the other.

Halton's winter carnival

IT'S PRETTY TOUGH to move quickly when you don't have a sled. Six-year-old Charmaine Morin of Etobicoke discovered this when she tried to descend without one. She was attending the winter carnival at Kelso with of her aunt Sharon Fergus who lives in Milton.

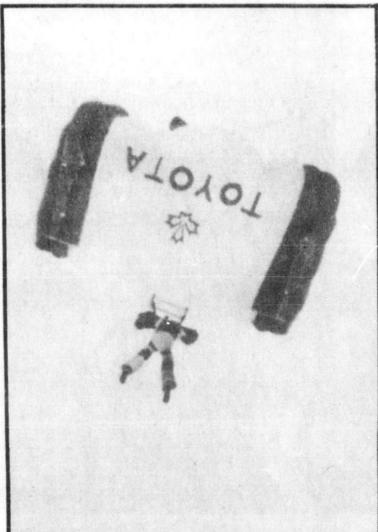

EASIER SAID THAN DONE was the doughnut-eating contest at Halton's winter carnival Sunday. Many youngsters were frustrated by their inability to snare a bite.

TAKING A CUT is Mary McCarvill of Oakville. She was in charge of the log-sawing contest at Halton's winter carnival Sunday.

APPREHENSIVE ABOUT THE FOOD, four-year-old Matthew Bressmer of Oakville isn't too sure about the hot dog he is eating at Kelso Sunday. Perhaps the reason is because of the cold.

WITH THE GREATEST OF EASE, skydiver Bill Cole drifts down to land on the lake at Kelso Sunday. He and a teammate braved a chill factor of 100 degrees minus zero Fahrenheit to make the jump.

AND THEY'RE OFF! Tobogganists stream away from the starting point in the sled race at Kelso Conservation Area during Halton's winter carnival Sunday.

SPORTING A COONSKIN hat in the tradition of Davy Crockett is Colin Percy of Oakville. He found the headgear sufficient to keep warm.

Photos by
Rod Lamb