Visiting homeowners

'Neighborhood Watch' arrives

Milton homeowners had visitors of a different sort last week.

"Ruth's Angels," as they have been dubbed, is a group of seven area university women employed for the summer by Halton Regional Police, to alert homeowners on preventative vandalism and burglary.

The summer program is called Neighborhood Watch and is sponsored through a federal grant.

The group has been at work since mid-May in Georgetown and Acton and will move into the Milton area in the near future.

Working in cooperation with the local police force, members of the group are visiting homeowners, door-to-door daily.

The group expects to call on 11,000 homes in the three communities in addition to schools and service clubs in each town.

"We want to discourage apathy among homeowners and encourage them to help each other to prevent vandalism and burglary," explained 21-year-old Ruth Geurts, of Georgetown. Miss Geurts heads the group of seven women.

Members include Natalie Brezden, 19, of Milton, Maria Sequens, 20, of Georgetown, Jeannine d'Etremont, Georgetown, Carolann Horning, Georgetown, Janet Greenslade, Georgetown and Becky Ellis, Georgetown.

The group reports good response from homes visited. Homeowners are concerned and receptive to the ideas expressed by the group she said.

Neighborhood Watch members are circulating brochures suggesting methods to prevent crime and vandalism.

The group recommends dead-lock bolts be used on all springlatch doors, anti-slide and anti-lift on sliding glass doors, hung windows, and that machanism be installed security pins for double-valuable items be engraved through Operation Identification.

RUTH'S ANGELS, as they are known, arrived in Milton Thursday to have a chat with Mayor Don Gordon. The three students are members of a seven all-women team, "Neighborhood Watch," working to educate north Halton homeowners on preventing vandalism and burglary. The group is working in co-operation with Halton Regional Police.

Youth charged

Halton Regional Police have charged a 19-year-old Acton youth with possession of a narcotic.

Members of the Milton detachment charged the teen with possession of marihuana after police made a search of his vehicle in Rotary Park late Sunday evening.

Police reported finding two marihuana cigarette butts in the 1967 GMC van and a small bag containing an estimated half ounce of marihuana.
