Hillcrest Church turkey supper is Oct. 22

By Mrs. Cecil Patterson
The October meeting of Bethel UCW was hosted by Mrs. C. Featherston on Wed. Oct. 1st at 8 p.m. with 12 ladies attending. Mrs. A. Ball, president welcomed the members and read a Thanksgiving poem. Mrs. J. Pickett reported on the enjoyable get together with Hillcrest members recently. The ladies will cater to a bowling banquet and also purchase a new vacuum cleaner for the church. The November meeting will be held in the new church hall, and the members will have a cup and saucer shower for the kitchen of the new addition. Hillcrest UCW sent an invitation to their turkey supper on Oct. 22 from 5-8 p.m. Committees were named for the fall bazaar to be held Oct. 25 from 2-4 p.m. There will be quilts, afghans, mincemeat, vegetables, bake table and afternoon tea. The guest speaker was Mrs. Mary Neilsen of Oakville, deaconess of the United Church and her message was on Thanksgiving. She told of the first Thanksgiving held on

Dec. 1621 by the pilgrims who landed at Plymouth Rock. There were 39 children and 102 adults in the group. It was a hard winter and by spring only 52 persons were left, the others had died from hunger, cold and pneumonia. Mrs. Neilsen had an interesting quiz on Thanksgiving, she was introduced by Mrs. L. Lister. At the close lunch was served by Mrs. L. Chamberlain and hostess. Congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Al Oughtred on the birth recently of their son Scott in Oakville Hospital, a little brother for Tracy. Next week is Thanksgiving and Erin Fair, hope all have a happy time.

The Hornby South 4-H club held their meeting on Saturday Oct. 4 in Omagh church hall, doing a review of meetings four and five. Furniture arrangement in the member's bedroom was discussed, there should be harmony by placing pieces of furniture parallel to the walls, there should be a centre of interest such as attractive drapes, wall hanging or painting,

Between the Willows

Out of the past

By Don Byers
Sunday morning, Sept. 27, I was awakened by an unusual voice, raspy, almost shrill. The memory computer in my brain was blowing fuses. Rhea came to me. "It's Fred Stevens," she said. I dressed quickly and entered the living room. "Hi Fred, how are you?" "Just fine, And you?" "Great." Before me was a big man, overweight and rather clumsy, not at all like the skinny kid I knew 50 years ago. Fred's family occupied the other half of the semi-detached house in which I grew up, 11 Gillespie Ave, Toronto. I used to play with his younger brother Les. As we chatted, the years rolled back, revealing a way of life that now seems like a strange kind of dream. Together we recalled the horse-drawn wagons that conveyed milk, bread, ice and occasionally goodies from Eaton's and Simpson's. There were also the street vendors, each with his own particular call. "Banna Ripe! Ayho. Ayho! Banna Ripe!" Almost ear-splitting, the message came from the fat man astride the seat of his fruit-laden wagon. And there was always a junkman, sitting behind a bony, old horse that looked on the brink of collapse, and probably was. Fred recalled the vacant lot at the corner of Gillespie and Davenport. There used to be a Roman Catholic hospital on the site. It was where I was born of strict Baptist parents. Within the time frame to which Fred was referring, it was one of our favorite play places, renowned for savage sessions of "Duck-on-the-Rock." "I'm writing a book about our old street," said Fred, "and about my father. You know, Don, when you think about it, there are all kinds of stories to be told." He then talked about the kids we grew up with, many of them grandparents now. He told me about his visit to the grave of Arnold Cunningham in France. Arnie was the second casualty from Gillespie not to return from WWII. I reminded Fred how I used to enjoy his living room, filled with mementos of the First World War, in which his father was an infantry captain. There were rifles, revolvers, bayonets, and a German officer's helmet, topped with a sharp spike. When I think back on it, Gillespie Avenue was virtually a community unto itself. Within easy walking distance where the public school, a grocery, a barber shop, Chinese laundry, where Dad's collars were starched, a drug store, shoe repair and, most important to me, a fish 'n chips shop. The nearby streetcar could take you wherever you wanted to go in the city. At the north end of the short street was a marvelous park—with softball, football and tennis in the summer, sledding and hockey in the winter. Fred had breakfast with us, and, too soon, was on his way—leaving a kind gift of memories in his wake. I wish him well with his book, and look forward to reading it.
