No arrests have been made in connection with either incident.

Jelinek warns

Car industry dead

Unless the federal government takes firm action, Canada could lose its auto industry entirely.

That's the opinion of Halton MP Otto Jelinek, Conservative spokesman on the problems of the ailing industry.

Mr. Jelinek recently followed that point in questions he asked in the House of Commons of Ed Lumley, federal Minister of State for International Trade and Herb Gray, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Repeatedly, Mr. Jelinek asked when the government was going to stop negotiating with Japanese auto makers over proposals for Canadian content in imported cars and take some firm action.

"There was absolutely nothing new in their answers," he said in a telephone interview Monday. "They're still giving the stock answers to every question on that subject."

Mr. Jelinek attacked both the federal government's lack of success in negotiations with the Japanese and in efforts here to stimulate the auto industry.

He noted, as an example, massive federal aid to the auto parts industry, when demand for domestic car parts is declining.

"What's the use of pouring taxpayers money into a sector of the economy where there is no demand," he asked?

"That money isn't going to be put to an effective use until there is a demand created," he said.

Demand for domestic car parts, he said, could only be stimulated by requiring Japanese manufacturers to use a high per centage of domestic components in the cars that are sold in Canada.

Canada is the only industrialized nation in the world that does not have such a requirement of imported cars, he said, adding that the Canada-United States Auto Pact is an example of the regulations that are needed "even though that pact is obsolete."

"It's not just me saying we need this... it's everybody in the industry," he said.

Canada currently has 1.2 million people unemployed and the slump in the auto industry is a large part of that problem because of the ripple effects that are being felt in other industries, such as steel and rubber.

"We are going to lose the auto industry unless some specific action is taken very soon."

School boundary

Students from the Timberlea area looking for a school to attend in September will have to live with a temporary arrangement for at least six months.

Halton Board of Education trustees recently approved boundaries for the new school they are building on Coxe Blvd. That facility is not expected to open until February or March of 1983 however.

The boundaries for the new school, which will house kindergarten to grade five children, run through the Timberlea subdivision and Trustee Bill Lawson readily admits there will be problems.

"When ever you draw a boundary line through a subdivision it will affect some people adversely," he said.

Roughly, students living west of Thompson Rd., north of Derry Rd., south of Nipissing Rd. and east of the E.C. Drury complex will attend the Coxe Blvd. school.

A specific map of the new area will be provided to students through the schools.

Until the new facility is constructed, trustees decided that kindergarten and grade five students will attend Sam Sherratt School.

Temporary arrangements for grades one to four will be announced shortly. Mr. Lawson said, adding that some bussing, possibly outside of Milton, will be required.
