REAL ESTATE CORNER

Jackie Verdurmen

What happens to your property if you should die without leaving a will and you have no living relatives?

If an individual owns property in Ontario and dies intestate (without a will) and without known kin his property reverts to the Crown. In Ontario, the Public Trustee takes possession in the name of the Crown. In some cases, for instance, if a farmer dies intestate without kin, consideration by the government might be given to the claim of a long-serving hired hand.
