

Budget creates $177,000 headache

Ontario's most recent budget could mean a $177,000 headache for Halton taxpayers next year. That's the grim tale included in the most recent financial report given by Halton's treasurer.

Gerry Lawson told members of the administration and finance committee recently that in 1983 the sales tax changes included in Frank Miller's last budget could cost the Region between $149,800 and $177,800.

In 1982, he added, the expansion of the sales tax to include many items purchased by municipalities will cost Halton an additional $60,600.

That amount will be made up by trimming existing budgets.

Mr. Lawson also reported that if current trends continue, the Region could find itself finishing the year somewhere between $150,000 under total estimated spending and $950,000 over budget.
