Computers have a HEART

BY LINDA KIRBY
Staff Writer
 Within the next two to three years, computers will form an integral part of policing in Halton region, replacing the conventional methods of filing records and statistical information and eventually assisting with the dispatch process.
 "Like any other business, we're looking at computers to see if they can do the job as we want it," explained Constable Dale Stanton, a member of the force's planning department and one of eight officers involved in the task force assigned to Project H.E.A.R.T. (Halton Entry and Retrieval Telecommunication System).
 "The police force is dependent upon information which must be processed efficiently so that we can produce statistical reports," he explained.
 "Our present manual system is overburdened. With everything on paper, we are running out of room."
 "In another 10 years we will need a building just to house records," he said.
 Now in the planning stages, the project estimated to cost $2 million, would likely be completed by 1986 said Const. Stanton.
 This would include overhauling the current records system in 1984, installation of a computer aided dispatch system the following year, and finally implementation of a field support system in police cruisers by 1986.

 The task force resulted from a recommendation by the Ontario Police Commission at the time of its investigation into the local force in 1978.
AUTOMATION
 It was then suggested a centralization of records was necessary with the ultimate goal being total automation.
 Last year, the Halton Police Commission agreed to a $25,000, 12-month feasibility study of computers.
 The Halton force is one of several in Ontario looking at a total reorganization of records and dispatch procedures with the aid of computers.
 The Ottawa police were the first to introduce the mobile digital computer terminal in cruisers in 1978.
 Hamilton-Wentworth and Peel police forces are now completing studies before implementing computer assisted systems.
 "For $2 million, this system is going to allow us to give the public faster, more efficient police service," said Const. Stanton.
 In addition to acting as a storage vehicle, the computer will mean a great reduction in the time required to report a crime and for police to respond.

"Rather than manually writing the information on a card and sending it down to the dispatcher, the complaint taker will immediately enter the information on the computer," he said.
FAST SEARCH
 "That information will appear on a screen in front of the dispatcher who will then be able to do a fast search of records to obtain any additional information, pertinent to the case," he explained.
 "It will hopefully take a lot of pressure off the dispatchers," he said, adding they will be able to work much quicker with more information.
 Perhaps one of the greatest benefits of such a system will be in the crime prevention department.
 Readily available statistics will enable the force to project work loads in specific areas, detect crime patterns and forecast a problem before it becomes acute.
 "Instead of waiting for a lot of reports to come in to twig the notice of an officer, he will be able to keep up to date with what is happening out on the streets," said Const. Stanton.
 "The officer will be able to do all of his own record checks. For example, he will be able to find out within a few seconds all information on current investigations for break-ins in a certain area."
 This will improve both the police response time and clearance rate of occurrences.

Women's dinner a resounding success

The first Person's Award Dinner sponsored by the Women of Halton Action Movement (WHAM) was a resounding success. The Oct. 18 dinner, attended by 135 persons, was highlighted by a speech by Laura Sabia and the presentation of the first Halton Persons Award to Peggy Balkind of Acton.
 The date for the dinner was chosen to celebrate the achievements of Halton women and the 53rd anniversary of the Persons Case. On that date in 1929, the Privy Council in London, Eng., ruled that Canadian women were legally persons before the law and entitled to the same rights and privileges as men.
 The Halton Person's Award recognizes women who have made a significant contribution to the improvement of the status of women in their communities. Such is the case with Ms. Balkind, now a co-ordinator of Acton Social Services and Information Centre, one of eight nominees for the award.
 Born in Toronto and raised on a farm near Newcastle, Ms. Balkind was active in social services in Acton for six years and Georgetown for 12. When on the board of directors of the YMCA in Georgetown, the social action committee in which she was also involved conducted a survey to determine the community's greatest need. From it grew the Contract Centre, a 24-hour distress line.

 She was the founding member and then staff member of a legal clinic which opened in 1977.
 But she was probably challenged more than anything else by the need for a shelter for abused women and was North Halton's representative at a meeting formed to study the issue. The result of years of work, trial and error, was Halton Women's Place, a home in Milton for battered women and their children.
 "We started with nothing, absolutely nothing," she said. "We had to find a location (for the home) and then the means of getting that location and that meant a great deal of fund-raising."
 She and her co-workers discovered that buying a house with no funds led them through a bureaucratic maze, dealing as they were with many levels of government.

 Microcomputers are becoming as common place in schools as text books.
 In an effort to cope with this new wave in education, the Ontario Association of Women Teachers' Association of Ontario hosted a conference recently in Toronto. The two-day conference was called "Help! The Microcomputers are Coming!"
 Beverly Whatmough, a learning resource teacher at Brookville Public School will share the knowledge she acquired at the conference with the staff at Brookville.
 The rural school began collecting microcomputers last fall and now has an inventory of four including three TRS 80s and one PET.
 Mrs. Whatmough utilizes this equipment in enrichment programs and special support education.
