Youth home changes hands

Financial problems which plagued Sheridan Youth Home throughout most of its three years of operation came to an end in June of this year.

The volunteer board of directors overseeing the temporary home for juvenile delinquents notified the Ministry of Community and Social Services it would cease operations because of insufficient financial support from the ministry.

When the volunteer board finally handed the administrative reins to the ministry, some concern was expressed by board president Bryan Clarke who worried about the future of the high standards of care at the home and the lack of private sector involvement at the home when the government took over.

Ron Childs, area manager for the ministry, insisted at the time of the Sheridan Youth Association's demise, that the home could be operated at an acceptable level with the budget provided by the ministry.

On May 21 he announced an agreement had been struck with Casatta Ltd. to provide juvenile observation and detention services at the home located in Milton.

At the time, Casatta Ltd. already operated a similar home in Kitchener. Diane Kotchendorf, director of the Kitchener home, said no further funds would be necessary to run the local facility outside the $347,800 budget.

While staff for the home were assembled and trained, juveniles who would normally be housed there were taken to other centres in the province.

Following a three week closure it was business as usual at the home, now called Casatta Youth Centre. Juvenile offenders waiting for court decisions on permanent placement, can stay at the home for a maximum of 30 days.

The home provides a semi-secure environment for juveniles from both Peel and Halton Regions.
