Students split on who to elect

By STEVE LeBLANC

Special to The Champion

Katherine Mortimer was most impressed with Richard Malboeuf, Michelle Miljour is split between the PCs and Reform Party and Jan Soltysik said he's still undecided.

These three first-time voters, and hundreds of more local high schoolers, were privy to Halton candidates' stand on the issues Monday morning during an all-candidates meeting at E.C. Drury High School.

Mr. Malboeuf, Katherine said, was the best speaker. She added, "I agree with his statement that all Canadians should be involved in the national unity crisis."

"Preston Manning put a negative spin on the issue but I think Mr. Malboeuf turned it around."

The graduating student asked Liberal incumbent Julian Reed to address his government's failures over the past three-and-a-half years.

While somewhat surprised that he touched on specifics such as the GST and inability to completely pay off the deficit in one term, she would have liked to have heard more.

"I kind of expected him (Mr. Reed) to do a little more tip-toeing around the question, so I'd say I was almost satisfied with his response," Katherine said.

Tory flag bearer Ralph Scholtens and Mr. Malboeuf are the front-runners for Michelle's vote next Monday.

She was intrigued by both candidates' enthusiasm and their parties' view that high taxes are killing jobs.

The PCs' promise to cut taxes now may be the deciding factor for Michelle, as well as Mr. Scholtens' hard-line stand against crime.

Jan said he would have liked more light shed on the important issues like job creation, health care and education rather than mudslinging between the candidates.

"They spent an awful lot of time criticizing their opponents," he said.

Their inability to make clear promises has left Jan undecided as the election draws near.

banner into Monday's vote, said his party would reverse cuts to education and improve accessibility to student loans and grants.

Making his Milton all-candidates debut, Bill Champ said his Green Party would work towards reducing tuition rates.

His suggestions include shortening the work week to four days, thus creating a job-sharing environment.

An income supplement for all Canadians — above the poverty line — would also be introduced, he explained, under a Green Party government.

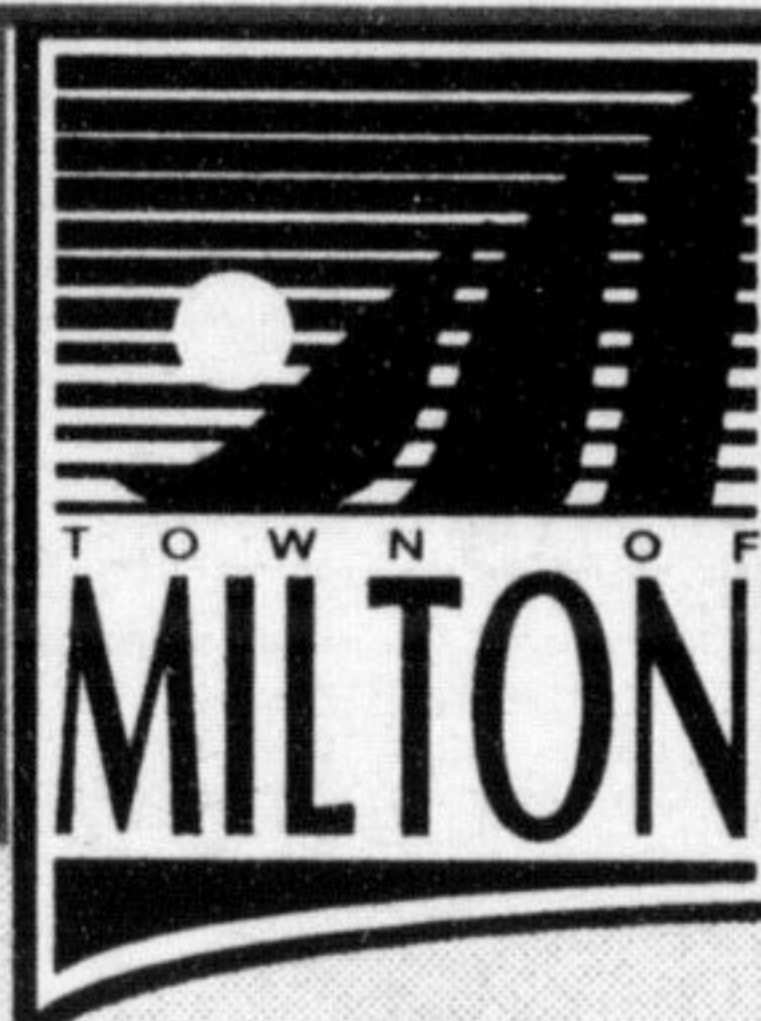

"The one thing I can promise is that the Green Party has never broken any promises," he said.

Focusing on one major concern of students — that of their future employment opportunities — Mr. Scholtens said he'd like to see every post-secondary student issued a laptop computer to create widespread computer literacy.

Mr. Reed touched on a number of fields where unemployment is nil, such as computer animation and aircraft repair, adding that a liberal arts degree will not ensure gainful employment.

"Sure we have a fine computer animation program at
