What I want to be when I grow up

Paint pictures in Japan

When I grow up I want to be an artist because I would get all messy.

I would paint pictures with all the colors of the world. I would paint pictures of the world. I would paint pictures and pictures.

My place to go in the world to paint pictures would be Japan. I would paint 25 pictures there.

I would paint pictures of animals from Canada. They would be amazed at what I would paint. I would also paint pictures of totem poles. They would want to know what they are and I would tell them.

They would love all of my paintings.

Crazy about science

When I grow up I want to be a scientist and mix up liquid and throw out bacteria and check things before I put them in packages and send them to stores.

It would be fun to work in a lab and work with liquid and packages.

It also would be fun to work with glass tubes, but I would have to protect my hands and face with gloves and a mask.

I can't wait to be a scientist when I grow up.

Mixing business with golf

When I grow up I want to be a businessman.

Being a businessman would mean I'd get to learn how to golf better and do other near things too. I want to take over my dad's business so I can have clients like Pepsi, Cadbury, Nintendo, KFC, Sony, Warner Brothers, Compaq and Hostess. But I have to worry about my really intelligent brother Jeff getting there first.

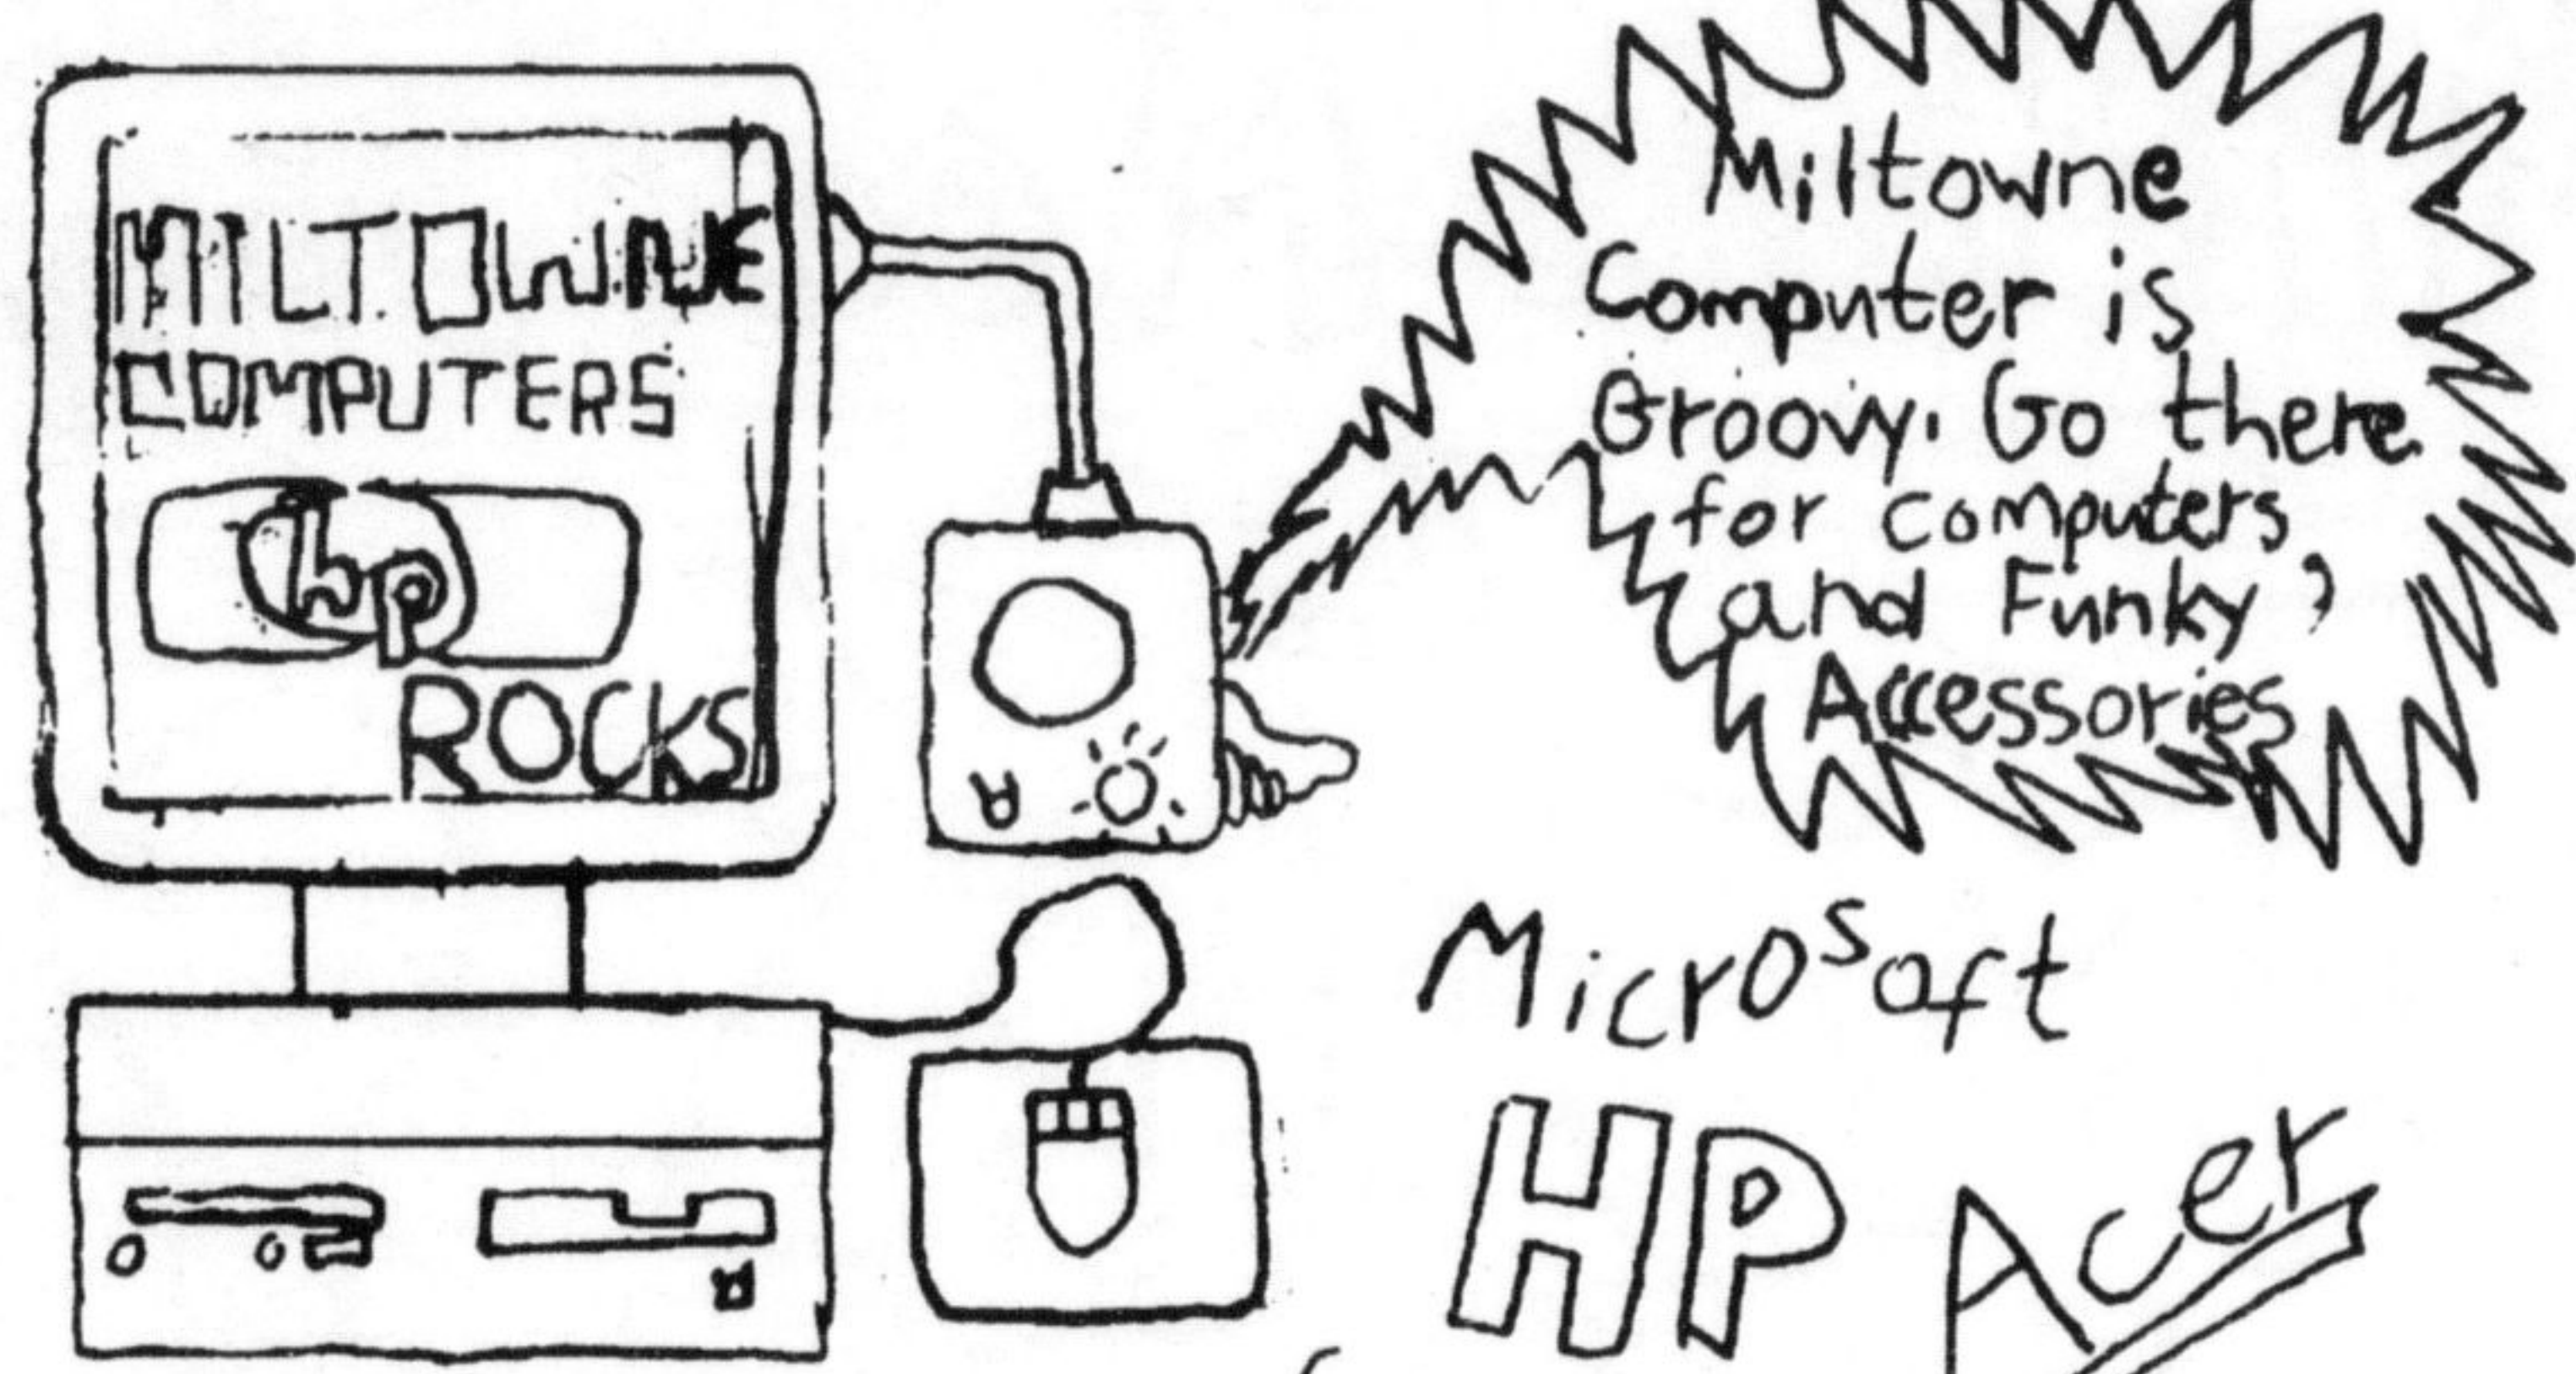

I want to help animals like my cat, so I'd also like to be a veterinarian.

She has three legs instead of four, and my dog has no tail, but we don't mind. I would like to help other animals, and meet little puppies, kittens and other animals too.

I would like to give them medicine, take their temperature and make them well again.

I hope I can be successful someday with a great job. And I hope you've enjoyed my story.
