

Rockwell spins off autos

Rockwell International recently announced a plan to spin off all its automotive businesses into a separate company by the end of September, 1997.

Rockwell's automotive sector, which includes a plant in Milton, had sales in 1996 of approximately $3.1 billion U.S.

The company is also involved in industrial automation, semiconductors, avionics and communications.

Rockwell sold its aerospace and defence businesses to Seattle based Boeing in late 1996.

Shareholders will receive shares in the automotive business on a pro-rated basis in addition to those shares currently held in Rockwell.

Rockwell's automotive sector has headquarters in Troy, Michigan. Worldwide, the automotive segment of the company employs about 16,000, with operations in Australia, Brazil, China, Europe, India, the Far East, eight U.S. states and Ontario.
