

Cedarbrook needs more funds

commitment from a very few dedicated people, brought about the birth of Cedarbrook more than a year ago.

It currently provides emergency respite care only, but the lack of support is even threatening that, Ms Waligora said.

Children up to 18 years of age from across the province will be eligible to apply for admission. However, most centre users will likely be from the Halton and Peel areas, she said.

The services are necessary as the health care field moves away from institutionalization, "yet funding for respite facilities is slow to be put in place," Ms Waligora said.

The project has received no government funding to date, but Ms Waligora continues to lobby the Mike Harris Tories.

"It's difficult competing with large established funding drives for financial support, but increased support is urgently required to secure financial backing."

While fundraising projects are ongoing, they won't come close to raising the $2.2 million needed for renovations and one year of operation serving 250 families.

But Ms Waligora is confident that as people become more aware of Cedarbrook Home and its purpose, support will come around.

"People are just starting to hear about Cedarbrook. That's my gut feeling," Ms Waligora's is aiming to have the centre fully operational by the fall.

"Families are looking forward to using this home. It is an urgently needed resource."
