Superb performance of Chinese Theatre

by Joyce Beaton
The theatre could have been the O'Keefe Centre. The players were disciplined and the audience sophisticated. As the students of Robert Baldwin school showed their appreciation for their classmates' performance, one young lad (not more than six years of age) was heard to yell "Cast, cast."

The applause was well deserved. Mrs. Zanatta's grades five and six class had worked long and hard to prepare their version of Chop-Chin and the Golden Dragon. Dramatized from a story by Laura E. Richards in Toto's Merry Winter, the Chinese play was first done in 1887 by Little, Brown and Co. of Boston.

Property man
As is the tradition of Chinese theatre the property man has as important a position as the players. Doug Riding, dressed in black silk, did such a fine job his performance received a resounding ovation. Doug responded with all the flamboyancy of a ham actor. The traditional Chinese orchestra was portrayed in realistic style by Gordon Coulter, Debbie Heyden, David Efthimiou, Sarah Schau, Jay Rodriguez and Cory Bakes. When they weren't performing, they were eating their lunch and socializing. A most professional touch was the music composed and arranged by Gordon Coulter.

Well trained
The cast, obviously well versed in the philosophy of the Chinese Theatre, was a credit to their director Mrs. Zanatta. They were Jackie Feagan as Chop-Chin, daughter of Ly-Chee; Kym Williamson, Ly-Chee, sweeper of the Imperial Courtyard; Patty Turnbull, Cathy Riley and Dawn Corner, Three Other Sweepers; Larry Feagan, His Celestial Majesty Wah-Sing; Cathrin Ronnebeck, the princely parasol holder; Jane Simmons, the unique umbrella opener; Kari Watson, the celestial train-holder; Danny Champ, Sentinel of the Imperial Courtyard; Terri Sutcliffe, the chief pillow thumper; Kari Watson, the finishing toucher; Philip Dew, Alan Burdett and Wayne Hubbs, three bronze guards; Trevor Sales, Darrell McCulligh, Evan Flower, three steel guards; Paul Boyce, Simon Benham, Jeff Goulding, three ivory guards and Renee Nolet and Susan Yoshida as the two priests.

HRCA plans C'ville face-lift

Campbellville Pond will have a proper outlet installed this year. The Halton Region Conservation Authority approved the spending of $2,500 for the project at a recent meeting of its Water Control Advisory Board. Explained as a "make-shift arrangement" by HRCA general manager Murray Stephen, the outlet is expected to save the authority money for maintenance in the future. The pond will also receive a face-lifting this year with landscaping, fish stocking and signs.

WEEK OF FUN
Youngsters enjoying the winter school holiday this week are participating in Milton Parks and Recreation Department's holiday week activities. Special programs are being run at the schools and Rotary Park, there's extra skating at both arenas plus swimming at the Drury School pool.

Kinettes conduct painting contest

The Milton and District Kinettes held an Easter Bunny Painting Contest on Saturday, March 22 at the Milton Plaza. Despite the rainy weather, approximately 115 town children enjoyed painting their impressions of Easter. The ages were five to 12 years old, with first, second and third prizes awarded to each age group. The winners were: Christine Dipasio, Darren Bailey and Tania Burton in the five, six year group; Teri Burton, Lynne Arthur and John Gilbert in the seven and eight year old group; and Andrew Innis, Shelley Bell and Danny Tielmans in the oldest group.

Judges
The judges for the contest were, Roy Downs from The Canadian Champion, Chris Logan, a teacher from Martin St. School, and Lyle Ducharme, the Manager of St. Clair Paint and Wallpaper. The Kinettes showed their appreciation to Lyle Ducharme of St. Clair Paint and Wallpaper in the plaza with the presentation of a certificate. Mr. Ducharme supplied the paint for the contest. Each child who entered the contest was given a sucker and the winners were presented with books.
