campaign does not hold a lot of credibility for her because it is championed by Mr. Campbell — who “is simply looking for publicity.”

Ms Belford, who is stepping down next month, gave the letter/questionnaire a quick once-over and threw it in the garbage.

She said “That’s what I thought of it. One part of the letter I took particular offence to reads ‘any trustee who chooses not to reply will be assumed to have answered all applicable questions in the affirmative’.

“Is this legal? I’ve never heard of a legitimate company or organization doing that.”

Fellow Milton Trustee Tim Kingsbury did not receive a questionnaire from PACT, and stated any opinions he offered would be based on hearsay. He is not seeking re-election either.

Mr. Campbell maintains PACT represents the views of 1,000 to 2,000 Halton residents.

Milton District High School is the only school in the region which includes the Joyce Carol Oates’ novel in its curriculum.

Mental illness week talk

Unmasking mental illnesses will be the theme of Mental Illness Awareness Week October 12 to 18.

“The goal is to increase awareness of the illnesses and their treatments among Canadians,” said Leanne Conick, spokesperson for the Canadian Mental Health Association’s (CMHA) Halton branch.

“By unmasking mental illness we can ensure that future generations are not faced with the stigma that prevents so many from seeking information or help.”

The Halton branch of the CMHA will hold an educational evening with Dr. Jacques Bradwejn of the Clarke Institute of Psychiatry in conjunction with the special month.

Dr. Bradwejn, who has earned an international reputation for his work on the psychobiology of anxiety disorders, will speak on “Integrating Alternative and Traditional Approaches in the Treatment of Mental Illness” Thursday, Oct. 16 at Notre Dame Secondary School in Burlington.

Admission to the event, which runs from 7 to 9 p.m., is $5.

Also as part of Mental Illness Awareness Week, Chapters bookstore in Burlington will host a display of books related to mental health issues.

For more information, contact Ms Conick at 845-5044.
