Plowing through

HRCA gets a tax break

Owners of conservation lands are in line for a tax break.

The Minister of Natural Resources (MNR) is moving ahead with tax reductions that encourage strong environmental practices on conservation lands.

"Conservation lands are highly significant and contribute to provincial conservation and natural heritage objectives," said Minister Chris Hodgson. "Landowners will benefit from a streamlined tax system."

According to the MNR, information will be sent to eligible land owners. In order to qualify the property must be maintained as conservation land.

The plan will have the most impact on the Halton Region Conservation Authority (HRCA), which owns substantial parcels of such lands.

"The province should have long ago created this category of property for taxation purposes," said Brian Penman, HRCA chair. "Currently the land under Kelso Lake is assessed as residential property and nothing could be more absurd than that."
