

Halton regional meeting schedule is revamped

By BRAD REAUME

Halton Region is making some internal changes to help accommodate the move to more fulltime politicians.

Currently Halton Region operates on a two-week cycle, with committee meetings in the first week followed by a council meeting in the second.

The administration and finance committee agreed to try a three-week cycle beginning in January, with an off week scheduled between each two-week cycle. The change is to give councillors more time in their wards, and doing other business.

According to Joan Eaglesham, Halton

Region's clerk, councillors from Burlington initiated the change because they will be serving in a largely fulltime capacity after the November municipal election, thanks in large part to a shrunken Burlington council.

Halton Hills council has also endorsed the plan but Oakville has decided not to move their schedule into alignment.

Oakville Mayor Ann Mulvale said the pace of growth in Oakville requires more meetings to properly serve the community.

It was generally acknowledged that with less frequency meetings will tend to be longer. Several councillors spoke favourably of having all meetings begin at 9 a.m. Now some start in mid-morning, others in the afternoon.

The Bible its message opened up in an hour!

What you will learn

A thought provoking synopsis of the structure and content of the entire Bible presented by the lecturer, Andrew Stubbs.
