Region to switch to morning meetings

• from CHANGE on page 1 haven't had enough councillors for a quorum with people leaving early.

"Morning meetings will allow for expanded meetings. Let's give it a shot."

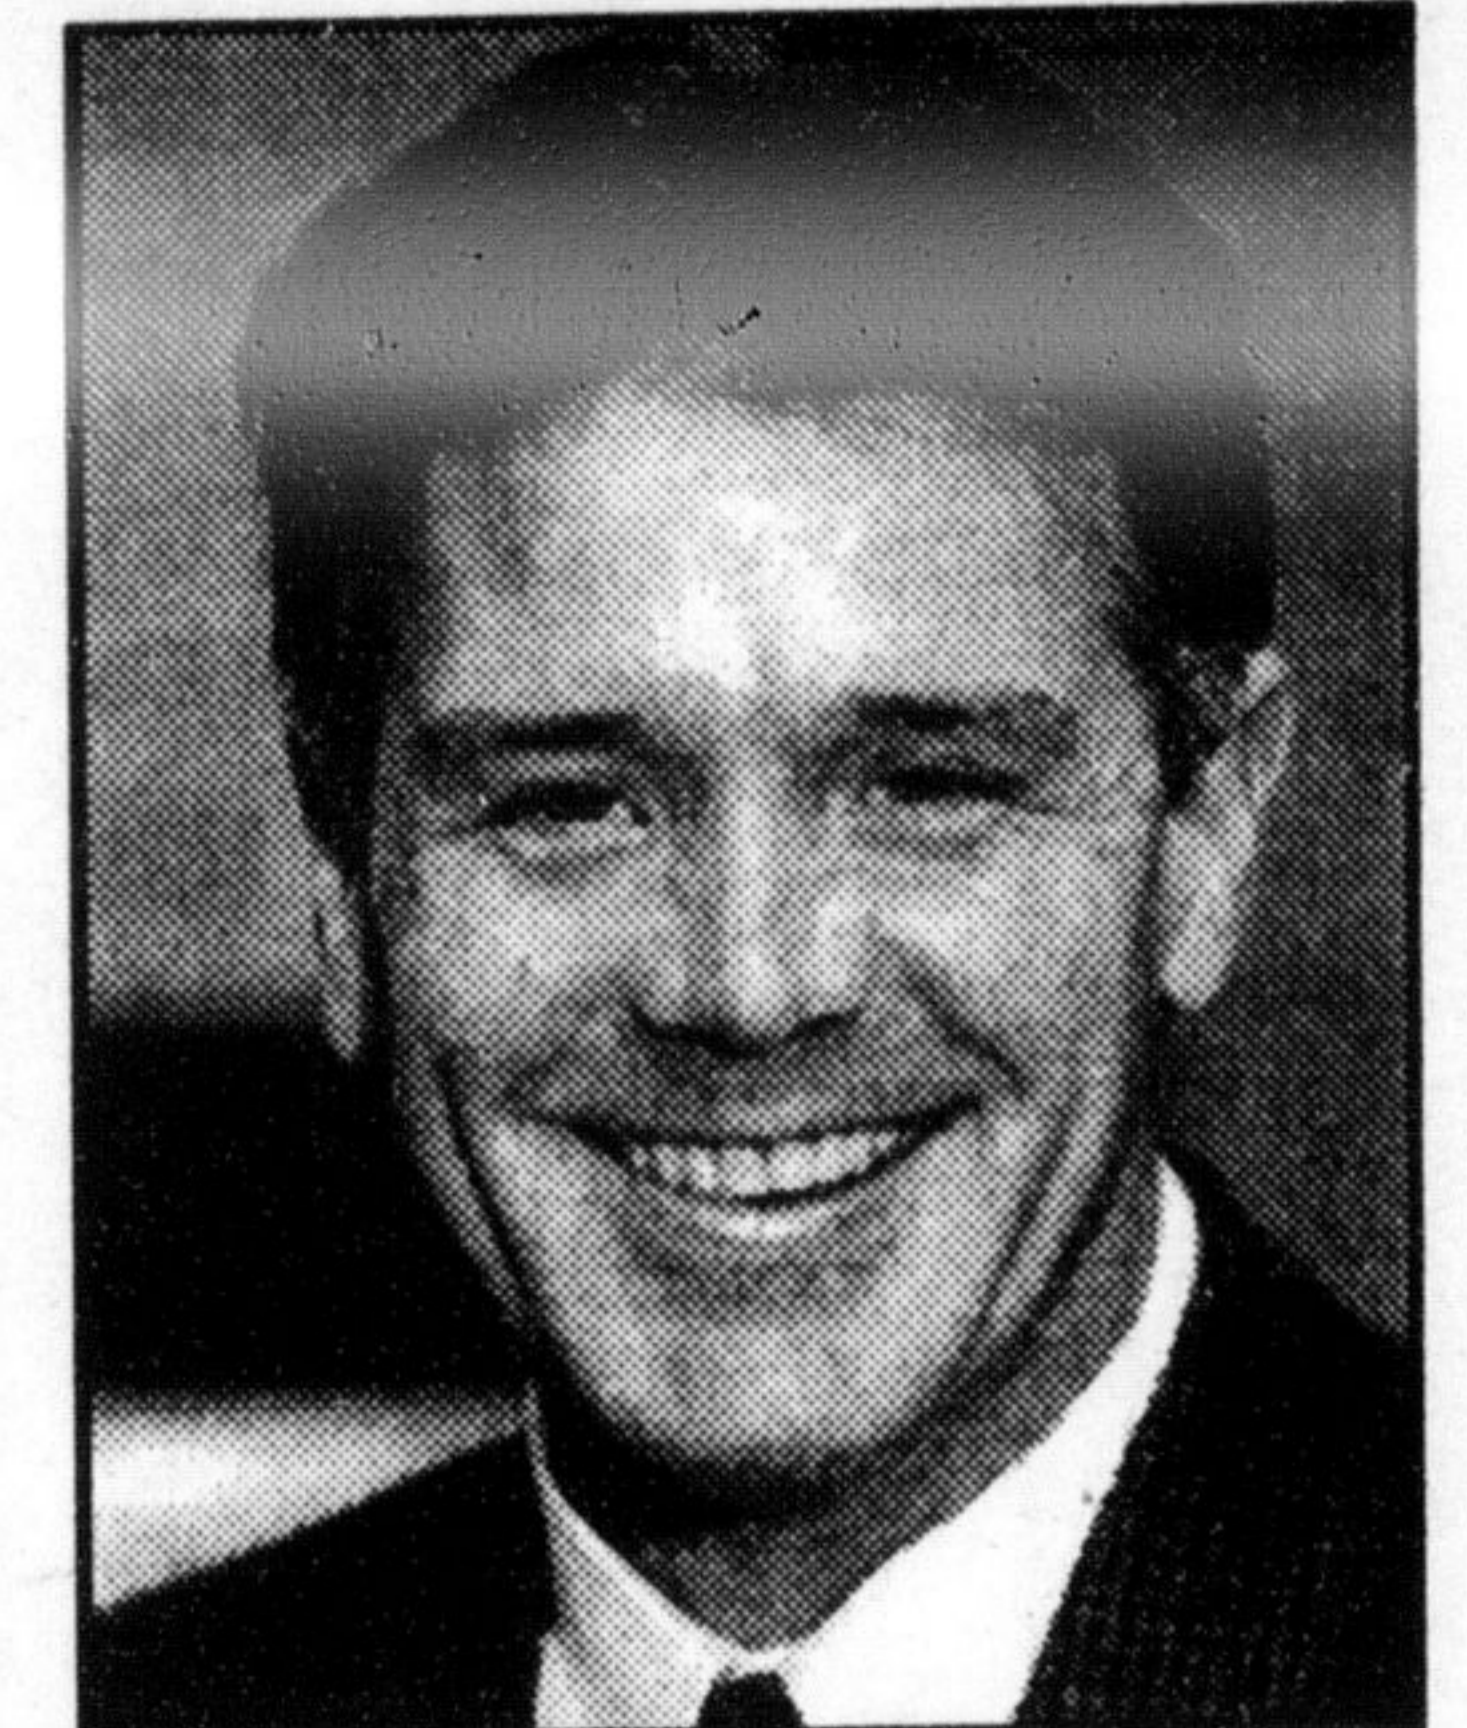

A separate recommendation called for Halton's three standing committees — administration and finance, health and social services and planning and public works — to meet in the mornings as well, on a day to be determined by each group.

The motions were approved by 12-8 and 11-10 margins respectively, with Halton Chair Joyce Savoline acting as tie-breaker for the second vote.

Ms Savoline said "Councillor Flynn raises an excellent point, our meetings will be getting longer" moments before the votes.

Contrary to many councillors' opinions, regional staff believe the switch to morning meetings will make regional government more accessible to Halton residents.

Burlington Councillor Jack Dennison said morning meetings would inconvenience Burlington and north Halton councillors and citizens, who face the ever-present possibility of delays from accidents and rush-hour traffic.

Added Burlington Councillor Mike Wallace, "The point of making it (regional government) more accessible to the public is noble, but switching to morning meetings isn't accomplishing that.

"Only evening meetings will do this. We all ran on the understanding of the present timetable."

Those opposing the switch spoke about the need for special meetings before council, and how 8:30 a.m. starts would become a major hassle for councillors and the media.
