CP's emergency response team and the Halton Regional Hazardous Spills Unit — along with members of the Ontario Transportation Safety Board — took over the cleanup early Wednesday evening and were still wrapping up their efforts yesterday morning.

Although one train car carrying dangerous chemicals — including organic peroxides and flammable liquids — was jarred as a result of the collision, CP's safety team conducted an extensive inspection and deemed the area danger free.

The accident blocked the downtown Campbellville rail crossing for three hours until an auxiliary train arrived from London to remove the damaged one.

Detective Sergeant Jackie Gordon of the Halton Regional Police confirmed that no charges were laid as a result of the accident and no further investigation will be conducted — besides that of CP.

Said CP public relations manager Paul Thurston, "Certainly there will be an in-depth investigation of the incident, but it's going to take some time."
