Adding access for disabled

St. Paul's United Church will be more open to everyone by the end of the winter with a $340,000 addition featuring an elevator.

Construction began Monday on a lift and link that will make the church and adjoining multi-level Christian Education Centre wheelchair accessible.

"We can finally take them (disabled people) to other parts of the church," said congregation member John King, who's heading the project. "We're very excited about it."

Currently the three levels of the Christian Education Centre, where functions and programs are held, and the church's two floors can only be accessed by stairs, Mr. King said.

Never seen hall

"Our handicapped persons have never even seen Graham Hall," he said. "We can finally take them to other parts of the church."

Graham Hall, where social functions are held after services, is located in the basement of the education centre.

The centre was built in 1962, when people were less sensitive to the needs of the disabled, said Rev. Bob Hyde.

He said wheelchair-bound and frail congregation members who come to services currently can't even access the washroom.

The new elevator and entranceway will be built at the back corner of the building, steering people away from Main Street to a safer drop-off and pick-up point, the reverend said.

The project is part of the church's 10-year plan to repair the sanctuary, which was built in 1890, and improve access to the education centre.

Rev. Hyde said the project also serves the purpose of making the church more user-friendly to accommodate new members when Milton grows.

Need money

Now, the church must raise the funds to pay for the lift and link, Mr. King said.

He said he's confident the church will succeed in acquiring the $340,000.

"St. Paul's always seems to be able to come up with the money. It's an amazing congregation."

An official sod-turning ceremony was held after Sunday's service. It's estimated the project will be completed in March.

St. Paul's United Church will officially welcome Rev. John Benham into their fold during this Sunday's service.

Looking forward to his work here

John Benham's recent move to Milton can best be described as reverse culture shock.

The 35-year-old minister grew up in Brampton but spent the last decade of his life in rural Palmerston, Ontario — which boasts a population of only 2,000.

He'll now offer spiritual guidance to nearly that many people at St. Paul's United Church. In return, his new assignment offers a trip halfway back to his younger days in the city.

St. Paul's had been without a second fulltime minister since Rev. Elaine Longland retired last year.
